Some people don't agree with how Portland Police Chief Mike Chitwood does his job. They think he's media-hungry. They think his style is too confrontational. He doesn't give a damn what people think.

Reinvention revisited

In 1993, city officials jumped on the "reinventing government" bandwagon, promising to make their bureaucracy more user-friendly. Amazingly, it seems to be working.

services to the aging of the population, the influx of refugees into the increased demands on the support... "All we had to do was the punchcard machines," says Galley. "We didn't look ahead very well. This got us into the sticking problem.

The advent of the reinventing process has been less visible. City department heads have been moving to the public sector. They have adopted new accounting and payroll systems, and have turned over some services for the use of the private sector. They have tried to remove and downsize these public agencies and the direct services that support them. For example, the public works department's collection of outside work has been reduced from a number of contracts to a single one. The sidewalk department in April 1995. The sidewalk department was restructured into five teams, each assigned to a council district.

City Manager Bob Galley and his 130-night team....

The book published in 1993, "Reinventing Government," is a significant contribution to the field of public management. It is a call to action for all levels of government to "trim excess fat, renew the public services, and get government working for the people." The book calls for a "new" government philosophy that is based on the principles of accountability, transparency, and citizen engagement. between a variety of punching bags hanging from the ceiling while throwing punches, feinting right and left. Between rounds, the chief drops his gloves and skips rope.

In honor of his early days in the ring, the chief has a crude tattoo of a boxer on his bicep.

In Portland, Chitwood seems to have a relaxed demeanor, but he's never been the laid-back type. His approach to work is methodical, and he's never been one to take things lightly. Even in his early days, he was known for his quiet determination and his ability to handle difficult situations with ease.

Chitwood's work ethic is legendary, and he's never been one to take a shortcut. In 1992, he was asked to take a case in which a man had been shot twice and was in critical condition. Chitwood didn't hesitate, and he quickly built a strong case, leading to a conviction of the suspect.

Chitwood's leadership style is based on respect and integrity. He believes in treating others the way he wants to be treated, and he always tries to lead by example. His dedication to the community has earned him the respect of his peers and his subordinates.

Chitwood has only taken one vacation since becoming a police officer. Last summer, he went to Disney World with his family. It was a much-needed break after a long year of hard work.

Despite his demanding schedule, Chitwood always finds time for his family. He's a devoted father and a loving husband, and he makes sure to spend as much time with his loved ones as possible.

Chitwood's dedication to his job is unmatched. He's never been one to take things lightly, and he always tries to do his best. His work ethic is a model for others to follow, and he's an inspiration to everyone who knows him.

Chitwood is a true leader, and he's earned the respect of those who work with him. His dedication to the community and his commitment to excellence are a testament to his character and his professionalism.
He does his way

When Mike Chitwood first became a police officer in Portland, he was known as a "street cop." He worked in the community, knew the people, and was respected for his dedication to his job. But as he rose through the ranks, some people began to question whether he was still doing his job right.

"Not everyone likes me. But I think the majority of the people support me, especially those in the city, enjoy a tremendous amount of support in the community," said Chitwood.

But as the chief of police, Chitwood has faced challenges from the community and the media. He has been criticized for his methods, especially when it comes to handling high-profile cases.

One of the biggest challenges for Chitwood has been dealing with the media. He has been accused of being too aggressive and not giving enough credit to the people he works with. But Chitwood believes that the media is important for holding him accountable.

"I've always had the feeling that I can do anything," said Chitwood, who often writes about his experiences in a book.

When asked about the current state of the police force, Chitwood said that for a while, there was some "screaming" coming from the community. "I think we're on the right path," he said.

But even with these challenges, Chitwood remains committed to his job. He believes that the police force is important for maintaining order and ensuring safety.

"I think that's our job," he said. "I think that's what we do, and I think that's what we're doing right now."
He does it his way.

The chief vehemently denies having a vendetta against the club and its owners. "Chitwood and the city are facing a lawsuit with some friends," he said. While he admitted to selling a second-hand camera to the club, Chitwood insisted, too, he doesn't have a vendetta against underage dance halls. But Chitwood and others, the chief said, insisted he never had anything personal against The Cage, a Wharf District club, but was hired by Ganley. He said he didn't personalize these things...it's business. "When you're a cop, you can't have a vendetta," he said.

Overall, he's pleased with his career in Maine. He believes he's doing the right thing.

Beer snobbery and the death of bartending:
The downsides of the boutique beer revolution

For those who argue that there's no particular skill involved in mixing drinks, I can only wonder why people (myself included) would crowd over to beer glasses for the sake of Mitchell's menards at Randolph—now there's a barmaid. And while the immediate reaction might be to quip triumphantly, such instances might never lead to barmaids in beer bars, and they're not necessarily as wonderful as I first thought.

Don't get me wrong—there is a particularly nasty inner ring of bartenders who are just beer jockeys, start asking for their beer. We attend beer festivals, tour breweries, join mug clubs, brew at home, became caught up in beer mania. But now that hyperfascination with beer will settle down.

There is a particularly nasty inner ring of bartenders who are just beer jockeys, start asking for their beer.

Beer snobbery. One can only hope that there is a particularly nasty inner ring of bartenders who are just beer jockeys, start asking for their beer, and act as if it were my fault. Case in point: I ordered a melonball at Gritty's, and the bartender refused to believe there was vodka in the drink, I suggested he read the recipe on the back of the bottle. No, he insisted, it was just orange juice and tonic or other mixed drink. But last summer I encountered drinks that were either pitifully weak or strong enough to choke a pirate. Worse, I encountered bartenders who couldn't make a drink appropriately, such as a proper pilsner.

The decline of bartending. The downside of bartending. It's no secret—Portlanders love their beer. We've created beer festivals, bars, breweries, microbrews, brew at home, celebrate the opening of each new brewpub and generally bell all in happy times.

There was a time when I, too, was caught up in beer mania. But now that the initial buzz has faded, I'm beginning to think that our beer bravado may have been exaggerated. After all, beer isn't rocket science. Don't get me wrong—I still want you to do the grown-up thing for a Longfellow Ale or Andrew's Porter. But perhaps it's time to temper our arrogance with a dose of reality. To take off your beer goggles and consider the following:

The decline of bartending. Portland pubs sport anywhere from 10-30 taps for beer. Not surprisingly, beer mixers are reservations much in demand. But unlike their wine-counterparts, there's no great deal involved in tapping a beer tap. A pint is a pint, you might say. As a consequence, we have a surplus of bartenders, and a surplus of mistakes.

Unscrupulous (and audibly) about the beer bars, and let others do the same phenomenon one observes with machines are just part of life's window.

Plastic Surgery Center of Maine introduces:

ULTRAPulse LASER AESTHETIC SURGERY

Laser surgery is now an affordable and highly effective alternative to traditional surgery. The new Ultrapulse laser technology allows for minimally invasive procedures with minimal downtime. The surgeon performs the procedure by directing the laser light to specific areas of the body, allowing for precise and controlled tissue heating. This technology is particularly effective for removing skin imperfections, such as age spots, sun damage, and facial rejuvenation.

Dr. Vern Weidberg of the Plastic Surgery Center of Maine, PA.

It is with great excitement that we announce the recent acquisition of revolutionary new laser equipment that allows us to perform specialized aesthetic procedures with less pain and scarless healing. The Ultrapulse laser is designed to target specific areas of the skin and improve skin quality. This technology includes a variety of treatments, such as laser resurfacing, skin tightening, and scar removal.

Resolve to help others in the New Year

“Smartest, easiest thing you ever heard of... get cash for a good deed. $130 a month, $1560 cash a year, all mine. Donating plasma, I sit back in a soft lounge chair, read, study, talk, or just dream, in a place filled with friends. 60 min. later I'm up and away, smiling, cash in hand.”

Come In... it's that easy!

Stop by for a warm reception...

and a WarmRoom® System demonstration

Find out how CNP's WarmRoom Systems can save you money and keep you warm. Thermostatically-controlled WarmRoom Systems provide even heat, clearly, quietly, and safely using an Electric Thermal Storage (ETS) heater. At the heart of the ETS system design are heat-storing, high density Thermal Mass® central heat units. These reheats when electric prices are low, then releases their heat to keep you warm all day. Be sure to stop by Booths 311 and 313E. We'll answer any questions you have and show you how the WarmRoom System can keep you cozy, and save you money, all winter long.
