Dying for oil in Casco Bay

By Paul Karr

In the week since the United States began bombing Iraq, protests, marches, speeches, and signs have appeared all over town. Rallies — both for and against Square and the former Federal Building on the intervention — have taken place at Monument Avenue. The protest signs were placed around the city, especially near City Hall and Federal Building on Monument Avenue.

One pedestrian sign on Congress Street reads, "Conserve Oil, Not the Igarchy." Whoever hung the sign in late January is not known. New England is the most oil-dependent region in the country. And Portland Harbor plays a major role in regional oil traffic.

70 million barrels of petroleum flowed through Portland Harbor in 1990, making it the third-largest oil port on the East Coast. The New England Rivers and Basins Council estimated that 99 percent of the cargo shipped into Portland Harbor is some kind of petroleum product. Some of this oil goes through a huge pipeline to Canadian refineries. The rest supplies Maine's oil-hungry paper mills, power plants, cars and homes. Large amounts of oil and other petroleum products are stored in the highly visible section of South Portland known as "the tank farm." All that oil sitting in one place makes Portland Harbor an easy target for terrorists. Responding to this threat, the Coast Guard is on heightened alert. What about the rest of the country? What about the rest of the world? But even without a terrorist act, the oil that moves through Portland Harbor is a threat to Casco Bay. Urban sprawl and sewage systems pump up to four tons of oil into Casco Bay every day, according to a 1988 estimate by the Conservation Law Foundation (CLF). And even this staggering quantity of pollutants doesn't include 70 million large oil spills into the water in one year.

While politicians and presidents debate whether or not U.S. soldiers should be dying for oil — Casco Bay already is.

Aaaahhhhhhh...

Wouldn't a hot cup of coffee with cream be great right now?

Why coffee makes you sleepy

During the last 30 years, Americans have drunk less and less coffee. One the last ten years, decaffeinated coffee took proportionally, all at greater share of the market. But during the last few years, enough has been learned about the properties of theanine to make it a popular and widely used ingredient in herbal supplements, teas, and tea products. As a stimulant, theanine can produce a feeling of calmness and relaxation. It is also used to improve mental performance and to enhance memory.

Growing wary of dairy

The health dangers of too much butterfat and too much cholesterol have been widely publicized. But milk products carry a less well-known risk as well: many pesticides are soluble in lipids (fats), and are concentrated there. Because of their high fat content, foods such as ice cream, cheddar cheese, butter, whipping cream, half and half, and whole milk can contain measurable amounts of cancer-causing pesticides. They're passed along the food chain from mother to baby — even to the smallest baby. The health dangers of too much butterfat and too much cholesterol have been widely publicized. "Dear Editor:"

"I am writing to express my strong opposition to the war in Iraq. As a concerned citizen, I believe that the decision to go to war was made without a thorough understanding of the potential consequences."

"I urge the government to seek a peaceful resolution to this conflict."

Arab sand in the American hourglass

We are the first Americans to start a foreign war, and we are the first people ever to sit at home and watch such a thing on TV. And as we sat glued to the amazing Nintendo-like images of a thing on TV, we might have been thinking about how much of our television sets were being powered by oil-burning electric generators like those one the CMP operates on Cousine Island in Yarmouth.

We sat here in New England - the most oil-dependent region of the most oil-dependent nation in the world - and watched our country go to war so we could watch our country go to war. Seventeen years ago, the same Arabs we are now ostensibly fighting to get out of the Middle East to exist beneath the surface of the Earth.

And now we have been handed our final confession. In August saw the first people ever to sit at home and watch such a thing on TV. Expert testimony

Nintendo's virtual games

If you have been living in a dark Appalachian cave, you've been missing out. Nintendo is one of the most successful companies in the country. Since 1985, Nintendo has been releasing video games that have sold millions of copies worldwide. Here are some of the reasons why:

1. Nintendo has sold over 400 million units of its video games in the United States alone.
2. The Nintendo Entertainment System (NES) was the first home video game console to become a household name.
3. The Nintendo Wii has revolutionized the gaming industry with its motion-sensing technology.
4. Nintendo's games are known for their engaging gameplay and memorable characters, from Mario to Zelda.
5. Nintendo has a strong global presence, with games available in multiple languages and地区.

But what makes Nintendo so special? According to experts, it's the combination of creativity, innovation, and dedication to quality that sets Nintendo apart from its competitors. (End of article)
