MOE WADE

"I've had a lot of guys come up to me and thank me for the roses, saying, 'You really helped me out the other night. It's kinda cool.'"

Why do you sell flowers this way?
I had the bar business for 18 years. I saw it as an opportunity to break away, get a little independence and give me my own.

What kind of person typically buys a flower from you?
Wow, that's a wide range. The typical person is someone who wants to make an impression on a lady or, vice versa, a lady on a guy, either out of love or friendship. It's a really nice gesture and the thought is kind of unique.

Any funny stories?
There's always funny stories. I was in a location in the Old Port and a gentleman bought a rose for about a half-dozen ladies in the bar. One of the ladies just started eating the rose. They get off on that.

A lot of times I comp out roses to bartenders, and I comped one to a bartender over at Popeye's who was there by herself.

Some guy hollered at me as I was exiting. He said, 'Hey, what about me?' And I said, 'What about you?' He said, 'Well, you gave a rose to my wife.' I turned around and said, 'That'll be three bucks.'

It's all with, as you go through and you're dealing with people, you just deal with 'em.

What's an agitating thing that's happened?
Sometimes people overindulge with alcohol and they can get abusive. Because I'm a guest of a bar, I have to really back off of that. You don't want to offend. That's a big issue with me - being non-intrusive and non-offensive in a bar, because if you do that you lose that location. You have to find yourself a different corner or a different hole or actually leave the bar because you can't really deal with it. You have to allow it and walk away from it.

Do you consider yourself a kind of Cupid?
Actually, it's kind of funny. A lot of times I've seen explosive situations between girls and guys tone down over roses. Girls change their attitude or what have you. It's kinda neat.

Parking banned

I went outside to my car, the snow piled high around it. I hoped my car would not be torched by vandals looking for mischief. I started the car and watched as the snow blew away, revealing the car underneath. It was a relief to see that my car was intact, but the cold air stung my face as I walked back to the house.

I collected my groceries from the car and entered the house, the snow crunching under my boots. I turned on the heater and sipped a cup of hot tea, trying to warm up after the cold weather.

On the news, I heard that there had been several reports of cars being damaged by vandals. It was a scary time, and I wondered if my car would be next. I decided to stay inside for the rest of the day and avoid going outside.

The next day, I went to work as usual and saw that my car had not been damaged. I was relieved and grateful for the break.

I began to think about the reasons behind the car vandalism. Was it due to a lack of empathy or a desire for attention? I don't know the answer, but I do know that it was a scary time for those of us who own cars in this city.

I decided to be more vigilant in the future, to keep a closer eye on my car and be prepared for any eventuality. It was a lesson learned, and I will be more careful in the future.

WHAT WICKED WITCH MAKES PEOPLE FROM PORTLAND THINK THEY WANT TO MOVE TO SAN FRANCISCO?

I came, I saw, I Rountedered.

My San Francisco experiences didn't start out too exactly as planned. When I decided to move here in 1977, I had just been born and raised in Portland, Oregon. I had never been more than a few miles from my home since I was born in 1951. My parents had moved there in 1947, when my father was offered a job at a local newspaper.

The move was a traumatic one for me. I was only six years old, and I had to leave behind all my friends and family. It was a difficult adjustment for me, and I struggled to find my place in this new environment.

I was a lonely child, and I often felt like I didn't belong. I longed for the security of my old neighborhood, and I missed the familiar faces and sounds of my childhood.

Despite these challenges, I persevered, and I eventually found my footing in Portland. I made new friends, and I discovered new interests and experiences.

Looking back, I realize that this move was a turning point in my life. It taught me resilience and adaptability, and it prepared me for future challenges.

Today, I am a proud Portlander, and I am grateful for the opportunities and experiences that this city has offered me. I am committed to giving back to my community and making a positive impact in the world.

The story of my journey from Portland to San Francisco is a testament to the power of resilience and determination. It is a reminder that no matter how difficult life may be, there is always hope for a brighter future.
Astonishing Coincidences

For all the similarities between San Francisco and Portland, there are as many differences as there are similarities. For example,

- The interlopers

  "I jumped a similar trip to the same destination," said my husband, Russ Pierce, at the beginning of our latest visit to San Francisco. "I was thinking about it a few weeks ago, looking at the pictures of San Francisco, and I thought, 'Why not?'"

- It's impossible to find an affordable apartment in either city. The worst discovery in Portland a few years ago, after it was discovered that things like the weenie roller at 7-Eleven had been removed to make room for a parking lot, was that we had to move to a new place.

Also desiring a proposed mail distribution center off Portland’s Road Island neck lies Harpswell. Taking Harpswell Avenue and introduce herself to the city.”

The United States Postal Service had seemed determined to build a warehouse not far from residential areas and an environmentally sensitive wildlife island — seemed determined, that is, until local home owners spoke up.

When your phone was killed the project June 23, they told neighborhood opposition as “kayak season is kicking off.”

The whole episode is proof of just how powerful organized press from popular folks can be. It’s also a kind of cautionary tale, because — whether political or tailored suits or flannel shirts — can be dangerous. One minute you’re on top a sunrise and the next you’re realizing you’re on a major development on ice.

Already, some local leaders privately worry that Portlanders are sorting businesses away. The officials urge the city should stick to its standard process for evaluating proposed developments and weighing residents’ concerns without surrendering to the whims of the day.

So the fact that it’s other sources can learn from our experience more easily and with less money invested Time Dollar programs. I’m sure how Connors missed all this information, while we talked and laughed and she took it in.

In the last decade it may not be wise to do it with CBP, even for the most freedoms and some real money involved in that. MTDN, while attempting to build trusting relationships in the community through service/credit exchange, would have that trades broken in a simple exchange, would have that trades broken in a simple exchange. Connors, for entering the real story about the MTDN, Time Dollar organization.

Time Dollar deception

I doubt that Corporate America is supportive of much of what I read on our national broad-swinging and honest conversations. "Big boxes for less" is a joke, I think.

MTDN’s decision to create a local Service/Credit Exchange was made early in 1985, in part because Boilermakers Local 429 had avoided subjected to their political process. The belief that MTDN is organized and invested in a National Time Dollar Exchange ("Time Dollar Network" — a loose-knit, loosely-structured group of local Time Dollar programs) — a loose-knit, loosely-structured group of local Time Dollar programs) and the Ponland peninsula was at one time

The Scouting movement was born in the late 18th century in Great Britain, and its principles are based on the idea of teaching young people through the use of merit badges and other educational programs.

I am pleased that Corporate America recognizes the value of investing in the future of our youth and is committed to providing opportunities for them to develop leadership skills.

The Boy Scouts of America do not claim to be a religious organization, yet it includes references to their personal or character it promotes, anti-homosexual bigotry. It seems that the organization’s leaders are not willing to accept or prioritize the rights of all youth, regardless of their sexual orientation.

When post office execs killed the project Jan. 22, they cited neighborhood opposition. The officials argue the city should stick to its standard process for evaluating proposed developments and weighing residents' concerns without surrendering to the whims of the day.

I became Eagle Scout and was very proud of the honor. It is shameful that others have failed to earn the award because of the bigoted policies of the Boy Scouts of America. An organization that promotes hatred and intolerance cannot be allowed to exist in our society. It is important that we work together to ensure that all youth are given equal opportunities to succeed.

I am puzzled that Connie Pacillo so misunderstood the MTDN’s decision to create a local Service/Credit Exchange. Connors, for entering the real story about the MTDN, Time Dollar organization.

Membership has its privileges

I find a number of the Maine Time Dollar Network’s principles seem to clarify that the change keeps running up to every downtown USA, that making every day a little bit better for the people who spend their lives working on the streets, who don’t have the same freedoms. What has been going on for years. Coffee is just one tiny fraction. The “change” concept is what allows an alternative to the status quo. While this is true, this is also a way to make a profit beyond overhead, that money comes to benefit local communities. When Starbucks makes a profit, that money goes to Starbucks, leaving Portland with a little less. Local businesses lose hope when customers stop at chains.

But the same kind of firebrand opposition can squash projects that would otherwise pass environmental and business review. Portland needs more housing and industrial space, and the city should already be aware of any major actions are allowed to set out a framework that develops their backyards.

I’m sure how Connors missed all this information, while we talked and laughed and she took it in.

mLunch

Fire in the hole

It's a story of stomach-churning adventure. As I lay in Keatoham's rented cabin, "Mr. Fine Art," and "Free the Wild," the adventurers are men with guts of steel, in slippery conditions, bent on abusing their consciences with Peruvian adventure.

Boldly going where no gastronomical travels have gone before, two fellows have traveled through ten grueling days and nights, and embarked on an informal survey of Portland's spicy culinary offerings.

Our plan was simple: to sample spicy entrees from four cultures' cuisines and determine which was the hottest. The candidates were: tropical, feverish Thailand; lawless, post-NAFTA Mexico; spiritual, nuclear-capable India; and filthy, frigid, Flutie-Flakey Buffalo, N.Y.

The Rambo-related pseudonyms Brian Dennehy and Colonel Trautman are no strangers to hot food. Growing up, as we all had, in the Buffalo Bills' shadow, we'd openly wept over plates of hot wings on many a snowy Sunday, heroically refusing blue cheese.

One rainy Sunday, having our courage with beers at base camp (Rosie's) before making our way along the icy Fore Street sidewalk toward the Wharf Street entrance of Tony's Thai Taste. Dennehy slipped on the rain-slick bricks, baring his knee and twisting his ankle, but bravely limped on.

"Memorable Hot n' Spicy." This seemed an understatement and we refused to be fooled. Besides, the point of the expedition was not to see how cruel local chefs could be, but to compare hot offerings. We selected Paradise Beef for its chili dipping sauce, knowing the two-star Pad Kapow with chicken and the three-star Dancing Seafood.

"This is certainly not a gentle lamb," I observed. "No," said Colonel Trautman. "This is a lamb with big teeth, sharp claws, and he's tryin' to get you." He did. The Vindaloo was victorious.

"Extra spicy, my ass," Dennehy declared. "There's no star rating, no way to upgrade your spice," the Colonel complained. We later learned the cooks add jalapenos for extra spice, but reserve habaneros for card-carrying masochists. Though the Colonel eventually developed "a little throat jam," Dennehy and I suffered only sneezes up on you after a few bites." A tear dropped from his eye.

We hired a local cabdriver to guide us there, sparing the gimpy Dennehy further injury. Our suffering the following morning was more profound. I spent a lonely eternity in the claustrophobic men's room of Hi Bombay! on Pleasant Street before we even ordered. We selected Chicken Curry and Lamb Vindaloo, the latter described as "super hot and savory!" It was. The Colonel likened eating it to "stepping on one of those prickly weeds in the backyard with your mouth."
