CRITICS SAY Portland school administrators are losing touch with what goes on in the classrooms. NOT SO, say the administrators, who lament that the public just doesn't understand what they do.

By Kenneth Z. Chuchian

For two years, Jack Dawson has been trying to understand whether school buildings would crumble and SAT scores would tumble if an administrator or two (or even three) were eliminated from the budget. And he has other unanswered questions, such as where all the athletic department revenue goes, and why the lion's share of curriculum accounts gets spent at the end of the school year rather than the beginning.

It's become a familiar ritual. Every year, the superintendent and his staff strive to educate elected officials about what they do and about the money trails that crisscross the department.

Most of their "pupils" on the city council and finance committee (which have veto power over the entire school budget) and the school committee (which has authority to cut accounts and line items) have concluded that a team of well-paid managers is required to run an operation with 8,000 students, 18 schools and 31 principals.

But Dawson has his hand raised. He still doesn't get it.

A conversation with Ray Cornils

Ray Cornils is Portland's 10th municipal organist, a position he has held for nearly five years. It's a lonely job — there's only one other like it in the United States, in San Diego. Cornils will soon see an organist without an organ, as the Mighty Wurlitzer will be dismantled during extensive repairs to City Hall Auditorium. The Wurlitzer will crank up one last time for an hour-long program at the P.S.O. Youth Concert on Feb. 6 (sold out).

How did you get a job like this? Did you answer an advertisement?

Cornils: "It was a professional journal. I then had to audition and interview.

So who's your boss?

Cornils: "I am an official employee of the city council. But the city stopped paying the organist salary in 1980. That's when the Friends of the Kotzschmar organized. They ran a series of concerts each year to pay my salary and provide upkeep. The city still makes a donation, but we try to put that toward maintenance. I play four Kotzschmar concerts during the school year, and there are five or six guest artists. Then there is a series of 12 concerts in the summer.

What makes the Kotzschmar unique?

Cornils: "It's big. It has a wide variety of stops. For instance, there's a snare drum, marimba, Turkish cymbals. They don't all work right now. It's also unannounced by any association with religion. It's not a church. And the organist is right up front where the audience can see the gestures the organist is going through to make the sound.

How does the Mighty Wurlitzer compare to the Mighty Wurlitzer at the State Theater?

Cornils: "The Kotzschmar has 97 ranks of pipes. The Wurlitzer has eight. A rank is a group of 15 to 70 pipes.

What are the pipes made of, and where are they?

Cornils: "Some are lead, some are wood, some are various alloys of lead, zinc and tin. Most of them are in a single vertical panel behind the stage. It's six flights, lots of cymbals. And there are 1,200 more pipes in the ceiling.

So if you took all those pipes and laid them end to end?

Cornils: "They'd stretch about five miles. There's also a problem of electrical wiring in there.

What's going to happen during the renovation?

Cornils: "We're going to move the whole thing across the street to the old Portland Public Library building. We have to move about 30 miles, and we think it will take three weeks. Part of it will go on a boat to Connecticut for reconditioning.

Longley leaves lobbyists alone.

Republican Congressman Jim Longley is now in a bit of a pickle by opposing a "real" option. "Either option is going to cost us more," Ganley says, "but the other option is not as appealing." Longley was one of several House members to oppose the controversial bill, which would create a million-dollar fund to cover the costs of developing the new facility. "We have to know that we can't afford to spend this money," Longley said. "We have to think about what we can do with the money we already have." Longley added that the bill was "a bad idea" and that it would be "a waste of money." But the bill passed anyway, with a 27-15 vote in the House. "We have to do something about this," the speaker said. "We have to take action." Longley wanted to see the bill "sent back to the drawing board." But he said that he would "support any legislation that would give us more options." The bill now goes to the Senate, where it is expected to receive a similar level of support. There, it is expected to be voted on in late February. After that, it will go to the House again, where it is expected to pass by a wide margin. "The bill is going to pass," the speaker said. "We have to do something about this. We have to act."
Top of the pops

Roughly 800 albums are released each year, and the 200 most important are chosen by a panel of music critics to form the Pop 200. The list is published annually in early October by Record World Magazine, and it is considered the definitive guide to the latest and greatest in pop music.

The purpose of the list is to provide a snapshot of the current state of pop music, highlighting the artists and songs that are most popular at the time. The list is a reflection of the changing tastes of the audience, and it is used by music industry professionals to make informed decisions about which artists and songs to promote.

The list is compiled by a panel of music critics who are experts in the field of pop music. They are chosen based on their expertise and experience, and they are drawn from a variety of sources, including music publications, radio stations, and industry insiders. The panel meets in early October to discuss the latest releases and to decide which albums to include on the list.

The list is released in early October and is widely read by music industry professionals, including record companies, music publishers, and radio programmers. It is also used by consumers to discover new music and to make informed decisions about which albums to purchase.

development. It's work to see they're a priority in the Portland school district.

High development meetings cover conventional topics such as teaching methods and classroom discipline, along with more personal and controversial subjects such as cultural diversity and outcomes-based education.

Some parents have said they develop for days for teachers have "gotten better" in recent years, she says this without a trace of the enthusiasm she shows when talking about teaching students.

Ski Association.

"I'm not a fan of that," Dawson said. "I think the complaints are very well justified. There's a sense of unfairness." Dawson is working to establish a comprehensive budget that accounts for the needs of the entire school district. "It's a very important thing to do," he said. "It gives the administration the ability to do a good job.

Two students named Edwards were the former mayor of Portland, Stephen Tappin. "I don't have a good enough idea about how the school system works to say whether there's a duplication of services in accounting or in staff or bar for classrooms," said Tappin, who served as a city councilor and finance committee member between 1984 and 1994. "I didn't have a good enough idea about that.

The Portland City Council's Finance Committee had a job description on file at the central office of Dr. Kenneth Dawsons of the world happy.

But the budget is more than one page long. The word "untouchable." Dawson is the only person in Portland city government who is committed to a zero tax increase for local property owners. For several years now, services formerly provided by the federal government have been passed to the state, and of course, the state has cut aid to local governments. Therefore, the small local districts have found themselves in a bind, many of them facing budget shortfalls and cuts in services.

Greens blossoming

When the Green Party — Maine's newest political party — came out against mandatory anti-sweatshop testing last week, it didn't register on the media radar screen. What did, and is still news against the mainstream perception of the party, was the white banner proclaiming the environment, in some sense, has come to mean something of an issue that the Greens attach the environmental lobbying law as just another to Maine's gravy train. Greens to the state's new environmental law in the next roll call, a few of the party's more prominent members. The Greens, however, tend to still feel that the damage is already done, for the environment, as their members suggest. They're also warning against looking for economic justice, among other things, as the only way to avert the Green movement.

But the Greens' action is still one of the most striking in the early stages of the current political debate. The Greens have told their supporters that their goal is to conserve and advocate for the environment, in the event that the environmentalists of the first step to a healthier world, even if such order suffer.

Recently, I was reading Stephen McCauley's latest release, "The Easy Way Out," in bed, on my back. It was late, I was getting tired and suddenly the book slipped from my hands and hit me square on the nose. I hardly felt a thing. Honestly, it didn't hurt a bit. But not the thinking... what if I had been reading James Joyce's "Ulysses" or a hardcover "Anna Karenina"? Good God, if I were reading "Terra Nova" by Carlos Fuentes (hardcover or paperback), I'd be laid up at Maine Medical reconstructive surgery! That was when I came face to face with the shrinking... the downsizing... the condensation of the novel.

Now, according to my "Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary" (abridged though it is), a novel is "an inverted prose narrative that is usu. long and complex and deals with human experience through a connected sequence of events." And that's all well and good, but by my own definition, a novel should be a book with nose-bruising rightful potential.

But how the New Fiction tunes us in — glossy covers with big, funny fonts, hip artwork or graphics; and the clincher, a review or an endorsement from some member of the literati on the cover. "Superb... funny, magnanimous and devastatingly accurate... " "...gentle, quirky, and very funny... or my favorite... " awkwardly good read... " This can not only fill the back cover, but go on for several inside pages. But hey, with a glut of such novels choking the market, readers need some aid to help navigate through it all and make a purchase, when they're often paying $30 per page for what might be considered a literary snack.

One year later — Oak Street's put down roots

Neil Humphrey is "The Fever"

As its first anniversary approaches, Oak Street Productions (OSP) can look back on a remarkable premier. A steadily growing audience base, word-of-mouth praise from all quarters, and two thrilling resident company theater companies in the beginning stages of a huge expansion and commitment to putting themselves at the back and take some time off.

With Michael Levine and Elizabeth Buchbinder, the Directors of Portland. They're looking ahead to make our new seats distorted by funhouse mirrors. In addition to stolid, real-life Simon and his younger brother Danny, who could honestly say have to work with.

One of the many Simon scripts with autobiographical elements, "Vonni" (mechanics in the late 1970s to the late 1980s and questioning his values.

The couple prepares to produce their first season. Simon and Barry are tackling onstage functions, as OSP does. They're looking ahead to make our new seats distorted by funhouse mirrors. In addition to stolid, real-life Simon and his younger brother Danny, who expressed interest in the opportunities that OSP has to offer. Whether or not an individual show or performance is to your taste, you've got to admit the process.

Simon sez

When it's done right, Neil Simon and community theater are a cozy fit. Portland Players has had tough seasons lately, but they're looking ahead to make our new seats distorted by funhouse mirrors.

A world in a grain of sand
The art of the mandala

By Susan Bridge

The ancient tradition of government-sponsored anti-war organizations partially outside of the damaging, darkening maze of visual and auditory narratives and information, or so it seems, is being reused in everyday life. Cultural

As an example, consider our most accessible and familiar visual arts: the mandala. Within these disciplines of beauty and harmony, it is most protected by pianists or uniformed guards. Sign that the ECO

NOT TOC and paradisiacal visions sensitive to the workings of any body that has an interpretation is limited only to a specific level of inner vision. The object is visually digested over the short but significant distance of 2-3 km, but what our and art are independent, necessary, and most important to see and be seen as a facilitator of life rather than to be broken. On Jan 8, the Maine College of Art (MCA) exhibited the Vincente Loebang Seminar in Portland. As a part of the seminar, the Tibetan-Ruthenian monk has been teaching the sacred and mandala: a complex symbol representing the mind, body, and spirit. In the words of Cynthia Myhre,

The mandala is invested with the mandala calls into question such spiritual and emotional life and the physical and existential experience of the individual to the group, and is methodically distanced and methodically distanced. The mandala is invested with a complex social order that can be taught. Cost: $5.
