Bar owners fear a temperance crusade. But merchants say the area needs tighter controls and a better image to lure consumers back to their shops.

The Moon, a popular dance club in the heart of the Old Port’s drinking district, was hopping last year. According to a police report filed last month, officers were called to The Moon 78 times between Jan. 16, 1992 and Jan. 15, 1993.

The reasons were varied, but mostly social. Nineteen fights. Twenty-one calls to remove "unwanted individuals or groups." Eleven assaults. Five battery. An April incident involving a dozen people. Two instances of drug possession. A June report of four men hanging from a tree outside the bar. The police, after a review of its records, recommended that the City Council deny The Moon’s request for a liquor license renewal.

The Moon’s patrons cried foul. During two recent City Council meetings loyal customers stepped forward to testify that The Moon’s staff is professional and efficient. They said that the bar is one of the safest places in the Old Port, and that a racially and socially diverse crowd feels at home there.

After considering further evidence submitted by The Moon’s owners, the police department reversed its position and recommended that the license be renewed, with the caveat that the bar align its closing time with other Old Port bars. (The Moon currently stays open for dancing, although liquor sales end at 1 a.m.)

The city’s crackdown on The Moon was only the latest salvo in its efforts to keep the Old Port from reverting to the nefarious Bar-bary Coast image it claimed two decades ago. The city is weighing tough measures to penalize street brawlers, and is trying to amend two state laws governing local authority over liquor licenses. Without such controls, merchants fear that the Old Port’s mix of bars and shops could change for the worse, filling the streets with a siege force of rowdy carousers.

Bar owners, not surprisingly, disagree. And they’ve joined with hoteliers and the alcoholic beverage industry to fight the bills in Augusta. They say that rather than saving the neighborhood, heavy-handed controls could sound a death knell for the Old Port, which attracts visitors and dollars from throughout southern Maine and beyond.

Ballday burglars acted alone, according to a 15-page report released by U.S. Attorney General Michael A. Surprise. The report, which was prepared by the Department of Justice, said that the burglars acted alone and that there was no evidence of a larger conspiracy.

In the early morning hours of April 10, 1993, a group of three men dressed as police officers entered the Ballday House in Portland, Maine, and stole a large amount of cash and other items.

Elected mayor rejected

The Portland City Council voted not to pursue the idea of giving the city an elected mayor.

The council voted 4-2 against the proposal on the November ballot that would allow voters to create a charter commission to explore changing Portland's form of government. Only Charlie Harper, Earl Long and John McDonough supported the idea, which was defeated by a vote of 5-1.

Proponents argued that a strong mayor would bring the vision of City Hall. "We've always had the impression that the missing ingredient in Portland is a mayor," said councilman Robert Sievers. "And when we're focused on the fire department and the city's budget.

Proponents also said that a strong mayor would increase residents' interest in politics and boost voter turnout. And they stressed that putting the issue on the November ballot was the only way to achieve those goals.

"Obviously, I'm not in the right spot at the right time," said councilman Rise Harper. "This is the moment to discuss this issue with the public."

Finally, councilors agreed that the issue of an elected mayor would make city government more democratic. "This isn't about democracy," said Tom Allen. "It's about power.

And why is the city's government so much more powerful than one person more democracy, democracy?"

Portland woman wants to rejoin Waco cult

A former University of Southern Maine student has decided to return to the Waco, Texas, commune to join theFlint Lake Branch of the Branch Davidian cult led by a compound after a bloody shootout

Climbing a wall, she climbed a daily routine to the 77-acre Branch disbanded, commune, where she had been locked in an impermeable space for months, according to various reports.

She had been in the compound for 1 1/2 years and was sentenced to prison for her part in the illegal weapons cache she kept in the Waco area.

The woman, who was sentenced to 10 years in prison, will serve her sentence in a federal prison in Texas.

The woman was convicted of conspiracy to commit murder and racketeering, and was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

The woman, who said she had been in the compound for 2 1/2 years and was sentenced to prison for her part in the illegal weapons cache she kept in the Waco area, was sentenced to 25 years in prison.

Efforts by conservatives to increase the visibility of the Portland City Council have failed so far this year. With many of the city's leaders behind the council, more power is being given to the elected mayor than ever before, holding close to the end of the legislative session and the August primary.

Despite-outreach was supposed to be increased with the council's backing, the mayor's office was in the process of making a decision on whether to pursue an elected mayor.

Councilors agreed that the system was broken, but they questioned whether the system could be changed.

"I don't think we're going to be the end of the line," said councilman Jack Leventhal. "We're going to find a way to get everyone on the council, and even a mayor can help.

It's not about power, it's about making sure everyone gets a turn.

Loving your Inner Bitch

By Elisabeth Elliott

There is an integral, powerful part of each of us that is so well hidden, we're not even sure it's there. This part of us has never been seen and has never been named. When we've been hurt or rejected, we've been so numb, we didn't realize there was anything we could have done. When we've been loved and accepted, we didn't recognize that there's a power in us greater than all the love we've ever known. This is the Inner Bitch.

We've been taught to be good, to be loved, to be valuable. But there's this part of us that's a bit more complicated. It's the part of us that says, "Who am I? What do I want?" It's the part of us that says, "I can do this!" It's the part of us that says, "I'm worth it!"

The Inner Bitch is not something you pretend doesn't exist. It's not something you need to hide. It's something you need to recognize and honor.

The Inner Bitch is not something for you to be afraid of. It's not something you need to be ashamed of. It's something you need to embrace and harness.

By understanding and accepting the Inner Bitch, we can begin to tap into our own power and strength. We can start to make choices that are based on our own desires and needs, rather than on what others expect of us. We can start to live our lives in a way that feels true and right to us.

The Inner Bitch is the part of us that has the courage to stand up for ourselves and to speak our truth. It's the part of us that has the strength to face our fears and to overcome our obstacles.

By learning to listen to the Inner Bitch, we can find the courage to make the changes we need in our lives. We can find the strength to face the challenges of life and to live our lives with purpose and passion.

Memory keeps William Thon's brushes full of paint and his sails full of wind

William Thon stopped naming his paintings after the thousandth one. Now they're numbered. Among his most recent works: a double-ended sailboat modeled after Greek sponge-fishing boats (above) and stands of birch trees outside his studio (see inside).

By Margot Brown McWilliams

Hiding in the woods and along the coast of Maine are some of the greatest artists in America. It's been this way for almost 200 years. They choose Maine, among other reasons, for the anonymity it provides. One of these painters is William Thon.

Andrew Wyeth is reputed to have said, "If you think my watercolors are good, you should see William Thon's." But most people in the state of Maine don't know Thon or his work — though it hangs in virtually every major museum in America, and every major public and private collection.

Thon has also won numerous art awards, including the Prix de Rome, and has taught in a number of prestigious teaching institutions, including the American Academy in Rome. In 1957 he was awarded an honorary doctorate of arts by Bates College. Throughout it all, he has been showing — and selling — for 60 years.

Art critic Alexander Eliot, writing in Time Magazine in 1954, described the "flawed-crystal complexity" of Thon's work. Nonetheless, Thon is not a household word the way, say, Willem de Kooning is, or Andy Warhol.

The reason is that the abstract expressionists took hold of the public imagination during the '50s, the way the pop art movement did in the '60s. It was decided by the pundits that movements such as these constituted "the cutting edge" of the "progress" of art. But Thon ignored them, and just went on doing what he did best. Consequently he never achieved any significant relationship with the fads and fashions of the era.

southern reunion after Cold War 10 years ago. The three groups reconnected with each other, and they began to write new material together. The result is a powerful and moving musical theater piece that addresses the complex issues facing the southern region today.

The show features a diverse cast of performers from the southern United States, including established actors, musicians, and theater artists. The production is directed by a prominent director from the southern theater community, who is known for his innovative and socially conscious work.

The setting of the show is a fictional southern town, where the story takes place. The town is a microcosm of the larger social and economic challenges faced by the region, and the characters are drawn from the diverse communities that make up the southern landscape.

The show explores themes such as race, class, and identity, and it offers a fresh perspective on the complexities of southern life. The music, script, and direction are all designed to create a immersive and emotionally resonant theatrical experience.

In conclusion, "The Southern Reunion" is a must-see production that offers a powerful and thought-provoking exploration of the southern experience. It is a testament to the power of theater to connect us to our roots and to the larger challenges we face as a society.

Belly performs Sunday, March 21st at 7:30 p.m., $9.50 admission, $4.50 for students and seniors.

Belly grows bigger

Belly, the band Tanya Donelly formed upon leaving Throwing Muses, recently hit number one on MTV’s alternative chart with their album “Belly.”

Belly’s music continues to be popular, and the band has been playing sold-out concerts all across the country. Their sound has gained the band prominence in the alternative rock scene.

CULTURE & COMMUNITY: BUILDING CONNECTIONS

Ann Bending, one of the nation's leading experts on historic preservation and restoration, will speak at the Portland Museum of Art on March 20 at 7 p.m. "Culture and Community: The Architect's Role," Bending discussed architecture as a cultural and artistic act of the past and the present. A her first, Ann Bending, is located in James and is nationally and internationally recognized for her work in building restoration, new construction, and historic preservation. The firm works with universities, museums, and public institutions, including the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Musée du Louvre, and the British Museum. Bending will discuss this plan at the lecture. The lecture is free to all museum visitors. Ann Bending's lecture at the Maine Museum of Art will be available through the Maine Museum of Art. For more information, call 775-1944.

Sample the many offerings of the Maine State Horticultural Show, which has blossomed in four days this year under the aegis of the Junior League of Portland. The theme of this year's show is "Dream Gardens," and features landscaped gardens and horticulture lecture series. Roger B. Souza, host of "The Victory Garden," and Thorne Shaw of The Maine Coastal Alliance for Parks and Landscapes are just two of more than 25 lectures. The show opens with a series of workshops on flower arranging, seeking with herbs and protected native plants. There will also be a Gardener's Boutique—an array of products and services for gardeners—and a Garden Cafe.

Sunday, March 21 is Children's Discovery Day—a day devoted to showcasing local and non-local activities. The luck of the Irish will be with those who attend and may even include parades. Activities will be held in the community through the Garden Center/Lawrence Farm, which has hosted several local nonprofit organizations including the Fuller House Resource Center, Windham Adult Education and Community Health Services.
