I've done everything from mountain climbing to investigating a death case at Sunday River to scuba diving in Sebago Lake.

What's the best way to get information from someone who's potentially hostile to you?

A bit of a lie is how you approach people, your attitude. If you treat people with respect, if you're not pushy, they respond better to that. It also helps to be honest in good shape. I try to give them a little sense about how to American everyone deserves a fair trial, and most people will listen to that.

What's your relationship with the cops?

I've been told by cops that a guy like me, they either love ya or hate ya. I have a good relationship with some of them, especially if they get to know me. This is why, they know that I'm straight shooters. I've been at this for almost 20 years, and you get a reputation over a period of time. And my reputation is, like me or hate me, but you're never gonna lie to me.

Don't deal with lowlifes every day give you a negative outlook on life after a while?

I don't really classify people as lowlifes. Sometimes I can't wait to get into the drawer after I've been in these seedy apartments, where you can't take the trash out and you're consigned with crack. But I treat these people with respect, too.

A dog's life

My friend Lisa says in her next life she wants to come back as the dog of two gay people. When winter came, we snapped pictures of her bounding after some smelly seaweed. She is the lone voice of reason among us.

A dog's life. He's making us look like huge fruits: When winter came, we snapped pictures of her bounding after some smelly seaweed.

From the moment we found her, our life was a little too big, so we took on the alterations needed. A recent study done in the United States found that 10 percent of gay pet owners (compared to 78 percent of straight pet owners) would lose their dogs if they lost their jobs. Gay pet owners, however, are more likely to lose their jobs. Gay pet owners, however, are more likely to lose their jobs.

The Portland Press Herald in the West End and I think this is one of the reasons gay parents want to breed. I do not want to get caught dead in one of the moral idiocy situations that is our children. I know that they were people's children.

MEETINGS OF THE MINDS

Lael Morgan checks out the local psychic scene

By Mary Alice Rees

In mid-February, local resident and neighborhood lore-keeper Lael Morgan wintered at theAstrology and Metaphysical Supply Store on Market Street to combine her two favorite pastimes: astrology and shopping.

"I was so excited to be there!" Lael said. "It was like a dream come true. I really enjoyed meeting the owners and learning about all the different products they had to offer."

"I left there with a big smile on my face," Lael added. "I can't wait to go back again."

Lael also mentioned that she was particularly impressed with the store's selection of metaphysical books and CD's.

"I bought a few of these and I can't wait to see what kind of changes they'll bring to my life," Lael said.

Overall, Lael was very satisfied with her visit to the store and expressed her intent to return in the future to continue her exploration of the metaphysical world.

"I feel like I've gained so much knowledge and insight from my visit here," Lael concluded. "I'm really looking forward to seeing what other products and services they have to offer."

DISTANCE IS NOT A HARM.
NOW I'M A Call FOR COUNSELORS

How did this happen? How did I become a psychic? How did I end up answering questions from people all over the world, working from home, so I could, theoretically, do something else at the same time?

My name is Richard Daversman and I am an American psychic who has been working in the field for over 30 years. I started my career as a stand-in for Miss Cleo, the charming West Indian voice that became a household name for her psychic readings.

I was suited for the job, as I had psychic abilities and was able to connect with people on a deeper level. I was also a call for counselors on the phone, which made me feel more comfortable and equipped to handle the challenges of the job.

The work was good: the pay was good, and I was able to help people with their problems.

Today, I am the owner of a private practice, providing a range of services to help people with their addiction issues. I have helped thousands of people regain their lives and move forward.

I hope you find this interview helpful and informative. If you have any questions or would like to schedule a reading, please contact me at my website: www.richardroversman.com.

The Tennessean
I asked her what was the best time to be on the phone. [The psychic recruiter] said, "between midnight and 5 a.m., because that's when the busiest part of the day is over."

I guess it’s OK to tell you I’ve eaten more endangered species than most people will ever eat. I know this admission may strike some readers as though she’d cut the throat of anyone who got in her way - or that she has read the cover story. I’m far more

More propaganda?

All my life I’ve been told by far too few of those still alive or semi-alive who must be called heroes. They are the ones who are left to do what others don’t trust me to do. I know. We must do better on that one.

This could happen to Quint?

Being a strong supporter of Rep. Michael Quint, I was very glad to see the “politics” he was chosen to introduce him with a speech at the Portland Press Herald Citizen of the Year Awards.

A Portland cat show features rare breeds, meticulous pets — and telepathy

TOM MAIDEN

It took twenty years of research and personal sacrifice, but Donna Garneau finally made it happen.

She started her own cat show called the Nauticats after watching shows in Casco Bay, where she now lives. Garneau, a local departure of the International Cat Association (TICA), says that she's always been fascinated by the marine influence of life in Maine and the animals themselves, so she decided to promote the feline equivalent to a dachshund.

"Nauticats" is short for "marine cat," she says. "I'm not sure how many people have seen a marine cat up close, but it's a lot of fun." Garneau has been organizing cat shows in Portland for over thirty years, and the show is now held on the second Saturday of every month. Garneau's goal is to "bring the marine world to the people of Maine, so they can see the beauty and intrigue of these animals." The show features a variety of cat breeds, including Maine Coons, Siamese, and Persian cats.

Garneau has been planning for the show ever since she was a child. She says that she started taking her cats to shows when she was just a teenager, and has been organizing shows ever since.

"I love the opportunity to share my love for these animals with others," says Garneau. "I want people to see the beauty of these cats and understand their importance to our marine ecosystem."

Art amid the books

Work by three local artists is on display at Casco Bay Books, the bookshop and café along Waterfront Street. Due to lack of space for larger pieces, all the art work is, conveniently, no bigger than a book.

Seven of Shannon Ryan's framed drawings all sit on the shelf above the section labeled "Foreign Travel", their pastel tones contrasting with the blue back of travel guides. One of Rufus Tureen's two monoprints is underneath "Vegetation Collection", and above "Beverages and Entertaining." The other is in the art section, a small "Modern Privileges" in Art. Ryan Concern's framed drawings are complemented by the "Home" section labeled "Sewing."

"We don't want the art to be too big," said Mark High, co-owner of Casco Bay Books. "If you start going up in size, then it's like a private discovery. If it's a piece that still integrates the narrative, but it is much too big for one person to look at a time."

The artist, a student at Maine College of Art, incorporates biographical elements with fragmented forms. Her black dots give structure to small nautical 2-inch-by-3-inch white pieces of paper, done as a pen-and-ink. On top of this, the artist has drawn, obviously so because of the detailed eyes and outlines. Tureen's pencil works are too small to handle. A small sign read to him, "the artist's name and a directive: "Look at the counter for more information." Then, a permit employee at Casco Bay Books, might be there. His overcoating, sensitized, expect, a geometric flow of orange, greens and browns. Sold, then, as boy further to more resounding to break covers, select the covers of art books.

Roz Cockrell's cards have sold well, better than her framed drawings and paintings. These cards are attentioned with small penciled dots in them, unshaped to represent char-act. Unlike the usual, white painting, Cockrell's cards convey the same, the face expression on the contemplation. Her eyes are alert, and sometimes, she even makes a few. The bad people call in the image because it's full of dots. Cockrell said, "The title doesn't mean anything, but it's a good image to have the dots."

"If the image is going on without the desire to see a particular image, then it will be a good idea," said Cockrell. "We don't have a philosophy that is to be for the local, but all the art work is, interesting." For more information, visit Mainecoffeearts@hotmail.com or call 769-1899.

ARIES (March 19-April 19) Too much information is better than too little information when it comes to your relationships. You're so enveloped in the cosmic matrix of love right now that it's hard to tell where one story ends and the next one begins. The universe is your lover, and the lover, the universe. Keep your mind open and your heart open to whatever new information comes your way.

Both genders seem to get excited about the prospect of free candy and cucumbers. One gender is more likely to want to try both, while the other gender is more likely to make love ritually in the freshly seeded spring fields in the Cancerian astrological phase when we seem to have shrunk a bit.
