Complaints of South Portland police brutality add up to a community relations headache

By Eric Hannelius

John Amegavluie, a student at Southern Maine Technical College and native of Ghana, claims he was assaulted by a South Portland police officer Feb. 16 after being pulled over and charged with operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol.

Like the well-publicized beating of a black motorist in Los Angeles on March 3, the incident is unusual in that it had a witness. The witness said that Officer Andrew Kennedy slammed Amegavluie repeatedly.

Clad in a white one-piece bathing suit and three-inch heels, Contestant Number 14 swims her body down the runway and pauses before the judges. With an appealing smile, she crosses one leg over the other and poses for a moment, then presents her back to the audience, smiles brightly and smiling over her shoulder, crosses to the other side of the stage to repeat her careful pirouette.

She exudes personality and grace and physical fitness. As she assumes the swimsuit pose before leaving the stage, the mistress of ceremonies reminds the audience, "This is Contestant Number 14, Michelle Spaltro."

Along with eight other women, Contestant Number 14 is vying to become Miss Greater Portland Teen. Nine younger women are also competing for the title of Miss Greater Portland Teen.

Miss Greater Portland is a scholarship pageant. A full 70 percent of each contestant's score is based on her talent and intelligence, yet the image of a royalty that women gliding down a runway continues to shape the pageant, and the Miss America program of which it is a part.

Scarborough rejects new town hall; councilors nearly fall through floor
Scarborough town councilors got an unexpected job when the town hall floor almost collapsed beneath them during a meeting on April 1. Just one day after modern wood paneling installed at the newly renovated town hall was “just as expected,” said Councilor Judy Bay. “It felt like the floor was going to give way and we were all about to fall through.” Mayor Bill Linnhas said he happened on the floor when there was a “hole.”

A few councilors who climbed down through the hole in the floor to investigate the accident found that a raised section and a vent support had snapped, leaving the floor supporting presently a 16-foot wooden beam.

Both the relator and support have been replaced and the town building committee has been asked to discuss further repairs for the 10-year-old building. Members have said it will cost $200,000 to bring the building up to fire and safety code standards and its structural integrity.

The town council has voted to extend $13,500 of April Town Fund money already on an excited building a new town hall. The Town Council, Town Hall Building Committee and a consultant have been told al the new town hall would cost $600,000.

Massage parlors rule Saco the wrong way
Portland councilors on Monday gave massage parlors a clean bill of health after they were shown some of the parlors by town officials as a result of the opening of three new massage parlors in six months and one concluding that licensing and regulating the parlors is the best way.

Although there are many reputable parlors that provide therapeutic massage, the Saco City Council has yet to make a decision on what to do about Portland.

They started getting the more prominent of your body, she's a very nice person, said Councilor Janet Norman. "That's not a massage," said Council Barstow.

City officials believe Saco should follow Portland's lead by using existing laws and preventing private massage. They say that Portland's ordinances, in response to allegations that some parlors were being used for prostitution, several parlors in Portland.

Portland's ordinance raised the fine to a fine of $200 to $500, according to Deputy City Chief Robert Roberts of the Portland Police Department. 'It's something we have to look into, said the mayor.

"The city took things under control and to drive off the erection of elements from an otherwise helping industry." Norman said.

Less smoky Casco Bay ferry relaunched
The Mt. Hope II began regular ferry service in Portland on April 1 after undergoing repairs at a Rhode Island shipyard over the winter.

Since coming on line in 1956, the 120-foot ferry has been plagued by engine problems, leaking flats of motor oil which blackened the dockside.

Last year the ferry was in trouble as it was found it was not up to fire and safety code standards and was declared unsuitable by the Maine Department of Labor's Industrial Safety Division. The ferry is to be employed as a on-time ferry.

Venture Laboratories axed 32
Venture Laboratories Inc., the Portland company that manufactures diagnostic kits for medical professionals, laid off 32 workers on April 2. Stuart Welch, senior vice president of human resources, said the layoffs were the result of a reduction in force due to the company's decreased sales.

"These workers were associated with the management of diagnostic and therapeutic products," Welch said. "The more we are made on the company would move to more personalized care for patients in the future."

Roberts said the company has worked to maintain market share in the diagnostic market and has continued to invest in research and development in order to stay competitive.

"This is nothing but an expression of the current economic climate," said Welch. "We are all being impacted by the same issues."

Stop the war on drugs, stop the war on cops

A vicious attack of the civil liberties of Rodney King by Los Angeles Police — made up of an average citizen with a cheaper conscience — has demolished the last vestiges of public sympathy for police brutality or wrongdoing.

Likewise, John Araguz’s claim that he was assaulted by South Portland Police officer Andrew Kennedy has also gained significant support. This is a natural reaction against what the community perceives as wrongful police action.

The public is calling for the resignation of Portland Police Chief Michael Chitwood, who has been the subject of several internal investigations. The public is demanding accountability and transparency from the police department.

Portland Mayor Ted Wheeler has called for an independent investigation into the incident, and the city council is expected to take swift action. The public’s support for Wheeler has grown significantly.

The incident has sparked a wider debate about police accountability and the need for systemic changes within the police department. The community is calling for a more transparent and accountable system of police officers.

As the investigation continues, the public will be closely watching the developments and demanding justice for the victim of police brutality.

The case of John Araguz highlights the need for better training and oversight for police officers. The community is calling for a more proactive approach to preventing such incidents from happening in the future.

The public’s support for the victim and the calls for accountability and transparency demonstrate a growing awareness of the issues surrounding police brutality.

The incident has also sparked a national conversation about the need for systemic changes within the police department. The public is demanding a more transparent and accountable system of police officers.

The Portland Public Library is presenting "The Bobbsey Twins & Friends," a series of children's programs designed to engage and educate young readers. The program features a variety of activities, including storytime sessions, craft making, and interactive games. The Bobbsey Twins, a beloved duo from the early 20th century, are the main characters in this series, which aims to nurture a love of reading among young children. Parents and guardians can register their children for the programs online or at the library, ensuring that all participants can enjoy these educational and fun activities together. The library encourages families to explore the world of books and literature in a supportive and stimulating environment, fostering a lifelong love of learning. For more information about the programs and to register, visit the Portland Public Library's website or contact the library directly.
