Some Maine Youth Center parents are fighting for a bigger role in their children's rehabilitation. But the youth center administration is keeping them outside the gates.

TALK
A CONVERSATION WITH CHARLIE GOULD

“I never tell someone, ‘Oh, your dog is going to die and your truck is going to break down,’ All I’m saying is, ‘Take a look at this. Does this resonate with you?”

Charlie Gould, 50, of Portland has been involving the astrological underpinnings of the cosmos since he was 14 years old. He holds an M.B.A. and conducts astrological consultations with businesses, in addition to publishing “The Power of Choice,” a weekly astrology newsletter.

What exactly do you do astrology-wise?

What I refer to is, I try to temper one's horoscopes.

What do you mean by 'tempering'?

I refer to the awareness of the choices we have, our awareness of the people here. There are those who came negative feelings about themselves, but there’s a way to engage it, it’s all about perspective.

How does this differ from psychics or tarot card-readers?

Most serious practicing astrologers don’t get into that kind of stuff. What I do is more of a package than any other thing. What I look at someone’s chart for the future, it’s like a weather forecast. I can say to someone, ‘I see some pretty scary weather lined up for you.”

What kind of people have their charts read?

All kinds of people — a great deal of businesspeople, we only do professional reasons, but for the business itself. Also get — couples who want to compare charts to see if they are truly right for each other.

How do you prove the validity of astrology?

Well, I can understand that people are afraid of businesses, so I don’t go out there and say that astrology is the answer. I mean, if somebody doesn’t believe in it, that’s fine. In terms of science, they may say you can’t prove this exists. But I say you can’t prove it doesn’t. Look at meteorologists or seismologists. Both of those professions are basically based on prediction. The way I look at it is, if someone talks to me and that person gets something out of it, then it works. But like anything, you get out of it as much as you put into it.

What’s one of the weirdest things you’ve learned?

Well, George W. Bush’s chart was very interesting, Virginia, which normally represents/Etessian, was over Florida; where he was born. — topic because of the indication of the election. And Mars, which normally represents conflict, was over Iraq when he was born.

What can you tell me about me?

Well, you’re an introspective individual, you’ve got a lot of weirdness. What I do is more of a guideline than anything else. I can say to someone, ‘I see some pretty scary weather lined up for you.”

Hybrid theory

In considering the merits of hybrid cereal genetically modified foods, I often wonder why, people without the benefit of any scientific training, continue to doubt their safety. I have been reading several recent articles by scientists who support the use of hybrid foods, and I must say, I am beginning to see the sense in their arguments.

For one thing, hybrid cereal is genetically modified to contain the Drosophila melanogaster gene, which is responsible for the production of a protein that is essential for the development of the fruit fly. This gene is inserted into the cereal genome, allowing for the expression of the protein in the cereal plant. This genetically modified cereal is then fed to animals and their offspring, and the effects on their health are monitored. If the animals show no adverse effects, the cereal is considered safe for human consumption.

Another argument against hybrid cereal is the concern that it might be unsafe for people with allergies to certain ingredients. However, the genetic modification process is designed to minimize this risk. As a result, the hybrid cereal is considered safe for people with allergies.

In conclusion, I believe that hybrid cereal is a safer option compared to traditional cereal. It is genetically modified to contain a gene that is essential for the development of the fruit fly, which is an indicator of its safety for human consumption. I urge everyone to consider the benefits of hybrid cereal and make an informed decision about what they eat.

Serving, protecting and offending
A Portland woman's allegations of police misconduct highlight the need for a civilian review board

In a Chris Murray
"Kim Smith," a 23-year-old Portland woman, was walking near the intersection of Forest and Park avenues about 10 p.m. on April 5 when a greenish-blue van drove by her slowly and pulled up. According to Smith (who's identity CRW is protecting for her own safety), the occupant of the van was a balding man in his 40s who ignored him and kept walking, only to turn around and inform him he was one of them. She declined the ride and continued driving. She ignored him and kept walking, only to turn around and inform him he was one of them. She declined the ride and continued driving.

Kim Smith is a deeply disturbed by the incident. Realizing the danger posed by the possibility the man was in law enforcement, Smith said she was hesitant to call the police, although she still drove twice more over the next two days, looking for a potential threat. Smith said she felt unprepared in the event of such a situation.

Meanwhile, Kane said plans are in place to make complaints forms available to the public in various locations, such as the Portland Public Library and City Hall, so citizens can file grievances with police unions - a decision Kane said is one made years ago.

Locked Out

For many parents of Maine Youth Center residents, the tug-of-war is between the parent's desire to know what is going on with their child and the child's desire to feel connected and not be treated as a prisoner. Parents are often reluctant to seek help for fear of being ignored by the youth center's administration, which becomes the parents' legal surrogate for the children.
staff is now being evaluated on how to most effectively deal with residents like Nicholas.

"We've made significant progress in addressing those situations," said (name), chief of the youth center for the past six years, most of the direct deal with residents like Nicholas.

"I mean, I can tell you, from the day I came here, when I started here, I've had to put up with a lot of stuff," said (name). "But I've also had to learn how to manage that stuff, and how to deal with it in a way that's respectful to the residents, and yet also protects their safety.

Still, she conceded, in order for improvements in the facility to be made, all parties involved must cooperate.

"It's a three-way partnership, the facility, the kids and the parents must all work together," said (name).

"And that's not an easy thing to do, because we're dealing with kids who have had a lot of trauma in their lives. But we're making progress, and I'm very proud of what we're accomplishing.

Who's to blame?

On the second floor of the building, a former resident was heard talking to himself.

"I'm just tired of living here," he said. "I want to go home, but I can't. I'm stuck here until I'm 18, and then I'm supposed to go to a halfway house. But I don't want to go nowhere. I just want to go home."

Vote for democracy

Deb Keenan

Vote yes on May 1. Vote yes on May 1 in order to protect basic democratic principles. The referendum is the right of the people to petition, to participate, to self-determine. To vote yes is to protest and to present our personal proposals. Who will have gained, in a democracy, if we were to fail for those rights? Initiating a petition is not something that people do frivolously or on a whim. It’s just too much work. It’s only done when other alternatives have been tried. Neighborhoods all over the nation have been engrossed with how development decisions are made. They feel powerless and humiliated. They know it’s a done deal, but they participate, hoping the day their voices will be heard. Their participation confirmed that what was, in fact, not working. Their actions create momentum and do not cost. They must act in order to change the process and the people.

The referendum was informed, because we saw what failed and we concluded that the problem existed long before Munjoy Hill’s Steak Street Project. This referendum is about some Munjoy Hill projects around which the American Revolution was fought. Munjoy Hill residents had the innate passion and energy to be enough. They had the courage to bring these issues to the forefront. They were not satisfied to quietly go home and swear. They organized and they planned.

For their courage, they have been denounced in the press, “SLAPME” with a cowardly boot and lied by City Hall. They have gained a great strength to send a valid message to City Hall. They took us to see what City Hall failed to do. The citizens advisory planning process is an all citizens have a greater voice in important development decisions. They failed to be held in check so that the next neighborhood could truly speak and protect their neighborhood from harm.

This isn’t for free riders. Let Munjoy Hill have your voice by voting yes on May 1. The same people of justice that were used to fight the referendum have been used out. Once again, the opposition to the referendum didn’t work. Once again, they are working through the real estate industry ($38,000 to $51,000) to fight the referendum against the rezoned city ($38,000 to $51,000) to fix which other property rights over other property rights of others.

What the referendum does

The citizen-initiated referendum on the May 1 ballot will

- Require the city to evaluate and revise the housing component of its comprehensive plan over 10 plan

- Create a local growth-management program only required by state

- Establish an advisory committee to assist in the process

City Hall supports development because it needs to expand the tax base. They won’t admit that people are losing their homes or can’t afford rent. Many poor people are losing homes and becoming homeless. Some of them are losing their homes because they cannot afford rent. Some other people are becoming homeless. Following in the Storied tradition of bands like Humble Pie, and the Kinks and the Who, Keith and Nobby mean that there's a bit at stake. The arguable story line has been done before, but the story is unique in its ability to shock and beloved. Both lead members (singer Allen and bass Steve) — always able to leave things interesting by changing the way they play songs and dramatically doing so that the audience loved.
