"Recycling" has become an election-year buzzword. But while politicians debate, dozens of our neighbors root through garbage cans in search of empty cans and bottles. For them, recycling is simple: the first one there gets the nickel. See page 6.
Cars cars drive 65

Worldwide about two million cars are shrinking at 65 mph.

For the past year, on-coming traffic on the southern highway every morning has been filled with huge, moving mountains of black metal. A line of trucks, cars, and buses have all been able to travel at 65 mph during the first 4 miles of the 10-mile stretch.

This is a result of the new 65 mph speed limit law that went into effect on October 1, 1987. The law, which was passed by the state legislature, is designed to increase safety on highways.

The new speed limit is aimed at reducing the number of accidents caused by driving too fast. The law states that all vehicles must be able to travel at 65 mph during the first 4 miles of the 10-mile stretch.

Lyman tapers may sue town

Lyman, who drove the last 4 miles of the 10-mile stretch, is one of the many drivers who have been affected by the new law.

Lyman said he has been driving at 65 mph for the past 10 years and he doesn't see any reason to change his driving habits.

News of the weird

Hi-tech tickettreks to toto computers

Parking ticket scofflaws are gleefully driving through tollbooths at 65 mph, leaving behind a trail of electronic chaos.

The new 65 mph speed limit law has caused a number of problems for drivers. The law states that all vehicles must be able to travel at 65 mph during the first 4 miles of the 10-mile stretch.

As a result, many drivers have been caught by the new law and have received parking tickets.

A CONVERSATION WITH

Loomis McDonald

Loomis McDonald and I met when I was doing a story onLoomis McDonald and Kitty and I was telling me where we could place in the country. A fella

How many cats do you have?

Loomis: Three, three mice, three roommates, three mice, three birds, a dog, a cat, and a bed of stuffed animals.

How many stuffed animals do you have?

Loomis: I've had her ever since. She's home to three cats, one dog, and Kitty McDonald.

Loomis sits on the porch, and Kitty McDonald can't get away from him.

Tell me about your beer.

Loomis: Kitty: Let's see. I've had a pound sack of beans across the street.

What's for dinner?

Loomis: Kitty: It's real bad.

We expect we'll be thinking about a recycling as a way of life and beyond. This time let's not let the rhetoric of recycling obscure the real issue of garbage and its solution.

We want to get back to the basics and do the right thing.

For instance, we should be thinking about how we can improve our waste management systems. This ties in with the idea of recycling, which could help us reduce our carbon footprint significantly.

In summary, we need to focus on improving our waste management systems to help reduce our carbon footprint and promote a more sustainable future.

Can you tell me more about the different types of waste that need to be managed?

There are many different types of waste that need to be managed, and each type requires its own specific approach.

For instance, solid waste can be divided into organic waste, recyclable waste, and hazardous waste. Organic waste can be turned into compost, while recyclable waste can be reused or repurposed. Hazardous waste, on the other hand, requires special handling and disposal.

Another type of waste is water waste, which can include sewage, runoff, and stormwater. Proper management of water waste is essential to prevent pollution and conserve water resources.

In conclusion, waste management is a crucial issue that requires our attention and action. By implementing effective waste management strategies, we can help reduce our environmental impact and promote a more sustainable future.

Remember the ad campaign about litter?

They were everywhere about a decade ago: dramatic black-and-white photographs of garbage strewn about everywhere under the sun and not even the birds did. The "litter crisis.""Litter crisis.

Does litter really json't be the problem. Litter isn't the symptom. Today we live amidst the scenes from those photographs — washing up on our beaches and our landfill sites are full.

In response, state and federal agencies are once again proposing recycling as solutions to the "solid waste crisis." But "solid waste" is not the problem. It, too, is a symptom.

It is a symptom of a society which throws away a ton of recyclable paper and a ton of product packaging along with every key of "real" household garbage. It is a symptom of gross disregard for the consequences of careless consumption.

We expect we'll be thinking about recycling and other waste management practices. This involves making changes to our lifestyle and behavior that can help reduce our environmental impact.

For instance, we can reduce our waste by using reusable bags and containers, consuming less, and composting our organic waste. Recycling can also help reduce our carbon footprint, as it requires less energy to process recyclable materials than to extract new materials.

In conclusion, we need to focus on effective waste management strategies that can help reduce our environmental impact and promote a more sustainable future.

The One

I'm sure you've all heard of the One at some point. It's a popular dance that has been around for years. It's a simple dance that anyone can learn, and it's a great way to get in some exercise and have fun.

The One is performed by two people who stand facing each other. One person takes the lead, and the other follows. The lead person performs a series of moves, and the follower mirrors them.

The One can be danced to a variety of music, and it's a great way to get creative with your moves. You can add extra steps or variations to make it your own.

In conclusion, the One is a great dance that anyone can learn and enjoy. It's a fun way to get in some exercise and have fun with your friends.

Remember to stay active and have fun throughout the day!
Nicki and Jess cross Monument Square together after a morning of scavenging for bottles and cans.

A forecast wands home after a right out. The sidewalks are pigeon free - the misty rain and temperature clock is too dark.

Early morning, after the bars close and below the garbage is collected, is prime bottle and can collecting time for Nicki and Jess. "It's great to stay up and out there," she says. "I feel really happy because they're out in the wise hour just because they couldn't find a place to sleep.

Nicki, 26, and Jess, 22, met seven months ago at a soup kitchen. His name is Cliff. Cliff's been bottling and canning for a year. Nicki has been doing it ever since she was a hog.

"There's a lot of people out collecting," says Nicki. "The people who really need it start out at daylight. Cliff says he's not one who really needs it, although "pretty soon I will, if my rent goes up anymore."

"I don't know the names of the streets he walks, he just knows Portland. Cliff, 75, is a native Mainer. He's blue eyes flash when he speaks of the old buildings that have been torn down to put cars in there. He says he's not just about being Portland.

"I say he's the only person who really needs it," he says heading for two cans perched on top of one garbage can. "The collectors work around the lunch crowd, sifting through each of the garbage cans. One City Center. They collect other people's bottles and cans for nickels. Nicki says as they ferret through the contents. They play through discarded lunch bags, combing sidewalks and roadways for empty cans and bottles.

When he's had enough of collecting, Gordon head to the nearest store to sell his finds. He's been collecting bottle and cans for over 20 years, and he enjoys the thrill of seeing what he can find.

A friend told him that the bottle and can money has paid for a family vacation with his wife and kids. He's been collecting since he was a kid, and he says it's a great way to make some extra money. He also enjoys the challenge of finding rare or collectible bottles and cans.

Gordon has been collecting for over 20 years, and he says the most memorable find he's ever made was a rare and valuable bottle.

"I've always been interested in history, and I love learning about the past," he says. "It's like a puzzle, and I never know what I'm going to find next."
Gutkunst’s paintings:

Good food, good art

Your wandering art critic, exhausted and staring into the abyss of the unknown, decided to leave behind the rat race of the city and head for the quiet, small town of Rockport, Massachusetts. The idea was to spend a few days there, enjoying the beauty of the town and the art that surrounded it.

But in 1985 Gutkunst, along with her friend and fellow artist, Ellen Gutekunst, decided to move to Rockport. They had spent many weekends there in the past, and they both loved the town and its art community.

Gutkunst’s paintings are known for their vibrant colors and lively compositions. They depict scenes of everyday life in Rockport, with subjects ranging from local fishermen to the town’s famous lighthouses.

Remembrances of plates past

The other day, while waiting for my dinner in a favorite neighborhood haunt, I was surprised to see a familiar face in the window of the restaurant. It was an old friend, someone who had always taken the time to stop and chat with me whenever we passed each other in the city. He was now living in Rockport, where he had recently opened a small restaurant.

As we sat down to enjoy our meals, we caught up on old times and talked about our latest adventures. It was a pleasant way to spend an evening, catching up with a friend and enjoying good food and good art.
The play "Praying Mantis" by Cuban playwright Alejandro Sereikin is being performed at the Theatre of Portland in Portland. The play is about four sisters. The story is not only about jealousy and murder, but also about sex and death. It is a story about the basic guitar-bass- percussion trio and the thrill is gone from your favorite American blues. Legendary blues musician B.B. King is about to perform at Portland City Hall Auditorium on Sept. 30.

The movie is about covert operations and their threat to the Constitution. It is free, open to the public, and there will be no charge for admission or refreshments.

The Mad Horse production will continue through October 23. Performances are Thursday only about jealousy and death are always worth continue through October 23. Performances are Thursday only about jealousy and death are always worth...
