BRODA LOEB

"THERE’S PEOPLE GOING IN AND OUT OF HERE SIX DAYS A WEEK. I DON’T HEAR ANYBODY SCREAMING. I’M NOT HITTING YOU WITH A BLOW TORCH."

Miss Broda Loeb, registered electrologist, Philadelphia native and longtime Mainer, has practiced her craft through the downtown since 1950. I’ve heard electrolysis leaves scars.

Get that scar business out of your mind. Electrolysis is nothing but a superficial cauterization. Several dermatologists have referred people to me for years. I’ve had several people that have had everything done: their faces, their arms, their legs right down to the foot. Tweezing and the use of wax, which is pulling, distorts the hair. Bleach toughens hair. Electrolysis is the only way to get rid of hair permanently and safely.

I’ve also heard it hurts.

Did you ever tweeze a hair? It feels similar to that - a little sting. All you’re doing is sliding a very fine probe into an aperture of a follicle. Do you work on unusual body parts?

I’ve done eyebrows, armpits, you name it. I’ve removed men’s hair from right under the ear. I’ve done several breasts, the whole thing. One square inch of anybody’s chest has got 5,000 follicles. When they get through, they have a hairless face.

I’m supposed to ask if you’ve ever removed a feather from someone’s body.

That’s the most ridiculous thing I’ve ever heard of. Thank you.

The race for the Portland mayor's seat is heating up.

In the race for the Portland mayoral seat, incumbent democratic mayor Michael LaMarche has been running strongly, but recent developments have drawn attention to the candidacy of Republican candidate Gordon Whitt.

In a recent debate, LaMarche and Whitt discussed issues ranging from crime to education. LaMarche emphasized the need for increased funding for schools and law enforcement, while Whitt promised to cut taxes and reduce government spending.

The race is expected to be a decidedly close, with both candidates vying for the center of Portland's divided electorate.

Alienated alumni

The lack of porkchop support left a few MECA graduates feeling neglected. There's been a push of past administrators, and they've failed to follow through with the school's history and see a change for the better. "Roger Gilmore turned it into a college," said Jay York, a local photographer and president of the alumni association. "They're people were seen as being a part of that. According to York, it was hard to find a few more graduates. "A lot of alumni criticize it," York said. "There were a lot of blunders." Current administrators are working on the problem of alienated alumni. Dean Smith said he would like to see MECA's alumni office to act as a networking forum for former graduates, especially those who move on to larger urban centers like New York or Boston. "We really want to know where our alumni are and what they're doing now, and we want them to help." He said.

"We live in an age of advanced multimedia," said York. "It's an extreme resource to use to MECA. Richards and York think that anyone can be useful to former students, too. York City. Is there someone they could use their degree and make a living from art? Smith said yes. "I keep thinking about that," said York. "I keep thinking about him.

SARAH GOODYEAR

Just the other day, I discovered a new business in Portland. It's been open since 1994, and its practice has been growing along with the city: Portland's bike share service, the Bike Denver Bridge.

I love bikes, and I love the city. That's why I'm so excited about this new service. It's not just for the few who already ride bikes regularly; it's for everyone. It's a great way to get around town without having to deal with traffic or parking.

Here's how it works: you can rent a bike at any of the three Portland locations: the Bike Denver Bridge, the Portland State University, or the Park & Ride.

I've tried it out a few times, and I must say I'm impressed. The bikes are in great condition, and they're easy to ride. Plus, it's a great way to get some exercise while you're out and about.

And the best part? It's free! Well, not exactly. You have to pay a little fee to rent the bike, but it's only $1 per hour. That's not bad at all, especially considering the cost of gas these days.

So, if you're looking for a fun and healthy way to get around town, I highly recommend trying the Bike Denver Bridge. You won't be disappointed!

Sandy Vogels' Yellow Bike Project brings bicycles to the masses

SANDY VOGELS: It's a warm May afternoon, and Sandy Vogels is at work as usual, emptying the bin at the front of the City Hall on Stevens Avenue. The bin is located in front of the City Hall parking garage, where bicycles are often left to rust away. Vogels begins by emptying the bin, tossing out the trash and returning anything that might be useful. She then proceeds to ensure that the bike rack is properly maintained, and she makes sure that the organization's public relations materials are updated and ready for distribution.

Vogels says of her efforts: "I've seen people band together and bring bikes to the masses. I've seen people create a culture of biking. I've seen people fight for biking rights. But I've never seen anyone do it on this scale before. Vogels has a unique perspective on the Yellow Bike Project: she views it as an extension of her work with the City Hall police department. She believes that by promoting biking, she can help to reduce crime and improve public safety. Vogels has been involved with the project for more than 10 years, and she continues to work tirelessly to bring bikes to the masses. Her dedication to the project is evident in her tireless efforts to ensure that bikes are available and accessible to everyone. Vogels believes that biking is not only good for the environment, but it's also good for the community. She says that by promoting biking, she can help to create a more sustainable city for everyone. Vogels is a true advocate for biking, and her efforts have helped to bring bikes to the masses in Portland, Maine."

Welcome...

...to the Old Port Festival, the first real day of the summer! This event is known as the best one-day festival in New England and showcases Portland's historic, waterfront area with its cobblestone streets and gas lanterns.

This year the Festival again features five musical stages and an Aerobics stage. The musical stages will showcase local and regional performers for many hours of great rock 'n' roll, jazz, bluegrass, country, and rhythm & blues! The Children's Area is returning to run the best children's area around. There will be the Children's Miracle Network Telethon, over 20 great games, and children's outdoor rides! And, of course, we will have a wide variety of International and American cuisine. Returning this year will be the exhilarating aerobics stage with aerobic demonstrations throughout the day.

The 1995 Old Port Parade will kick off the 23rd Annual Old Port Festival!! This highly acclaimed procession will start at 11 a.m. and travel from City Hall to Exchange Street, Right on Fore Street, and a right onto Union Street to end at Congress. There will be something for everyone, so don't miss it!!

Sincerely,

Keith Citrine

GET A QUICK HANDLE ON THE MOVEMENT THAT MOVED THE MIDDLES.

The current awareness of Portland's cultural activity is fascinating. Not only are we blessed with some excellent institutions, but we also have a vibrant community of artists and organizations that keep the city's cultural scene dynamic. Here are some highlights:

Art Exhibits
- Museum of Maine Arts and Crafts: Through May 31. Hours: Tues-Sun, 11 am-5 pm. Contact: 781-2330.
- D'Amato: After a brief stay in New York, the artist has returned to Maine and established a studio in Portland. His large-scale works reflect the artist's interest in exploring the relationship between humans and their environment. Contact: 783-8228.
- Java: A collection of works by contemporary artists from the United States, as well as contemporary objects from Africa, Asia, and the Middle East. Through May 31. Hours: Mon-Fri, 7 am-4:30 pm. Contact: 774-1114.

Music
- Casco: "From the Woods: 15 Sculptors, One material" featuring metal, ceramic, and wood sculptures. Hours: Mon-Sun, 11 am-5 pm. Contact: 772-9605.
- D'Amato: Featuring old-era Congress Street art. Hours: Mon-Sat, 12-6 pm. Contact: 773-2555.
- Java: Game Show featuring various artists. Hours: Mon-Fri, 8 am-4:30 pm. Contact: 774-3791.

Theatre
- D'Amato: Featuring various plays. Hours: Mon-Fri, 8 am-4:30 pm. Contact: 774-3791.

Radio Active
When Rewinding Recordings put out its new CD, "Songs from Vantastival," in 1996, nobody had any expectations that a compilation of mid-coast bands could be any good. But was. Subsequent compilations have continued to impress, mostly by being free of the overproduction that is so common in mid-coast music.

It's the end of the marathon feast servers in the local theater season, and Vintage Repertory Company and Mad Horse Theatre are serving up dinner. Vintage's offering is Christopher Durang's funny 'Beyond Therapy,' a humorous take on fine and relations. Mad Horse goes for the suspense single with 'Scotland Road,' an engaging, if flawed, play that moves on the notion that not one to what they see.

The central characters of 'Beyond Therapy' emerge through a bank of stories, every time to be linked, including personal therapy, open relationships, hellbound and platform shoes, while the supporting cast adds to the mix, including Brad (David L. Minter), a young couple who must decide whether to keep or throw away their 20-year-old dachshund; Cricket (Rita Goldstein), a young woman who must decide whether to keep or throw away her 20-year-old dachshund; and the other's

The time of the play is in the living room of a new house. The scene is Maine, the characters are young, and the play is set in the summer of 1956. The story centers around a young woman who is trying to come to terms with her past. The play is written in a series of monologues, each one telling a different part of the young woman's life. The play is performed in a small theater, and the audience is seated in a circle around the actors.

The acting is good, and there are several fine performances and a lot of provocative details. Dennis Scott is excellent as John, the man brought in to break the silence. The lighting is simple, with a series of lights that light up the actors and the set when they speak, and the costumes are simple, with a mix of modern and period clothes. The set is a large living room with a couch, a table, and a few chairs.

Up and Down the Maine Coast

A 20-week advertising supplement in the Casco Bay Weekly

Overcoming the Size Factor

There’s been a recent, and welcome, invasion of arm-powered craft all along our coast. Rowing and paddling are extremely happy and healthy ways for an intimate discovery of the natural boundaries of our bays and islands. Simple, too.

The hours are not subject to registration, don’t require motors or slips, are not limited by decreasing ramp locations, rarely break down and don’t pollute. It is no wonder that more and more people are choosing the arm-powered way to be on the water.

But a casual look at these tiny and silent craft is, well, they are tiny and silent. The battle of the big guys and little guys is intense. Victims of the big guys cause an instant, a churning or capsize, but the catastrophic dangers kids bring literally run down by the larger vessels. A harrowing power boat with glistening beef calf and stereo blaring loud enough to be heard over engines is to a kayaker what an Int Stick is to a turtle attempting to cross the interstate. I know that a strictly serious analysis of the defensive alternatives for the little guys is called for. This is not it.

The Whales, ocean rowing shells and canoes are most often solitary craft. The kayaks travel in schools. A canoe has more evasive options than a crowd, and it is the pod that is most vulnerable. And since kayaks have a freeboard about as high as a shoe, their profiles can be easily obscured by a medium wave drop.

There are two breeds of kayak attacker, the random and the purposeful. The purposeful is certainly drawn to small, brightly colored objects. Perhaps the best defense against them is camouflage.

The random don’t know exactly where they are or where they’re going but head there as fast as possible anyway. These guys have confidence in numbers, do not look at their destination and have been told that there is a possibility of anything small. They are the most dangerous — especially when safely parked on a ledge.

The standard kayaker’s defense of brightly colored craft and clothing and a whip staff with fluorescent flag is definitely not enough. One must appear to be large or menacing — or both.

It is very difficult, if not impossible, for a kayak to appear large when the visibility is clear. One might consider a quickly inflatable balloon or the marine radar frequency would help.

The use of wind is much more effective, however. I’m sure a loudspeaker can be fitted with a tape player to amplify endless story messages. The assembly would be head-mounted like a bonnet. If the expected message is powered craft, one would state out a combination of lengthy-sounding names, rousing fog signals and ambulance sirens. If the menace is more likely to be selling craft, the message would repeatedly follow “starboard tack” and “woman overload.”

I have no doubt that the engines and flame-throwers because one doesn’t have a hand free to employ them when paddling. Another idea that wouldn’t work unless one knew the politics of the invader would be for the kayaker himself to wear one of those full-head rubber masks.

Next Gingerich or Bush Limbaugh images would scare the hell out of those in liberal waters. Conservatives would recoil upon seeing the head of John G. Galleghan walk by. Who knows but maybe even right-wingers might be terrified by the image of Gingerich floating along, literally as well as figuratively over his head.
