A CONVERSATION WITH

DIANE JELLIS

I'm a social person. You really have to be. This is no job for a shrinking violet.

After 32 years, Diane Jellis, 52, dropped her job at Harvard University and the near six-figure salary that went with it to become manager of the Portland Yacht Club in 2001. The Portland resident also raised her kids, worked as a Lobster whaler, and has been a stay-at-home mom.

What was your college major?

I was a philosophy major, but my social life and the care and feeding of my daughter were more for me. I was the first woman and the first non-college graduate to hold my job at Harvard.

How did you meet your husband?

I met my husband during the last days of college. I was a philosophy major, but my social life and the care and feeding of my daughter were more for me. I was the first woman and the first non-college graduate to hold my job at Harvard.

Why did you stay at Harvard?

I stayed there right after my first marriage. I was working in a role shop. On occasion. My daughter was 1 year old. I had a friend whose father knew someone at Harvard, and they helped me.

What are your hobbies?

I'm a social person. You really have to be. This is no job for a shrinking violet.

Good news - the PPD goes public

The Portland Police Department did the right thing. On June 6, Casco Bay Weekly was notified by the late Gary Wood, who set up the City of Portland, saying the PPD will make its police log public starting June 10. As promised, the PPD produced something it calls an "Annual Information Report," which covers arrests made from June 2 through June 6, complete with 46 names of those arrested and those who renewed them. Officials also provided CRW with this copy, instead of selling us the first three pages and five page chart, as was done in the past.

Unfortunately, the report did not include action for last weekend. Nor was the usual report, "_calls for service," available, which means we don't know how many drug busts were made, the number of cases solved, etc. At least the department has shown it's willing to make its records public. Getting the information end up to speed to a lengthy history may take a few weeks, but we say an effort to come up to speed is a fine place to start. We commend the PPD for going public.

Meanwhile, for this week's listing of arrests, we turn once again to the Cumberland County Sheriff's Department, which every Monday provides a report of those booked into the jail over the weekend.

Out on the campaign trail

This year, there are more out, gay, and lesbian candidates for state office than ever before. That is truly inspiring news. But let's not forget that recent events have made this moment a moment of great privilege for a moment that Maine is currently the only New England state without a mandated civil rights law. They are all running or staking their claims to a wide variety of issues. It's gratifying to see that we've gotten to a place in local politics where a candidate's position on the issues carries greater weight than his or her position in bed.

Not ready for society
About to be released from jail, a convicted domestic abuser admits he can't stop his rage.

What do you think you can do out?
I don't think it's what I mean to do. I'm not an animal. I'm just a kid. I haven't all the time. I'm not the one who he's made a. I'm not the same person. I've been on some bad trips. I don't appreciate all the complications. I don't have a lot of time and I'm not the one who he's made a. I'm not the same person. I've been on some bad trips.

Why did you strike your mother?
I was angry. I was mad. I was tired. I was sick. I was upset. I was depressed. I was drinking. I was smoking. I was not thinking.

What do you think you need to get better?
I think I need to get help. I need to get the help I need. I need to get the help I need. I need to get the help I need. I need to get the help I need. I need to get the help I need.

Not just for the super rich, but big bucks help

JUNE 11, 1998

For the last four generations, most Portlanders have had little to do with their sailing heritage, unless it was to travel in a ferry passenger. Boating had replaced boating as a recreational sport. Although the city was once an islander home and has become again a world-class port, and residents of the city, one of the most delightful existing areas on earth, it might as well have been in Kansas.

In the last three years, however, an encouraging number of sailors and would-be sailors are moving off shore. Most are young. Some are old. Many gave up their boats. Then Harbor with good cause.

The popularity of the yachts and trains were the way people moved. "They were the IS-wheelers of their day," said Phineas Sprague, former Portland Yacht Services on Portland Harbor, whose houses long placed Maine waters for fun and profit. "Small boats were the pickup trucks. If you wanted to do anything, you had to have a boat." (Commercial) boats, and greenery on a boat no more.

Avoid Portland Harbor

In prior years, the Portland exchange taken prior to the turn of the 20th century and for decades or so thereafter, there were so many boats, both large and small, it was almost impossible to see the water.

"Portland Harbor in the past had big sailing ships," said Ellen Gutekunst, who serves as unofficial den mother of the Portland Sea Scouts, Jen Jutras. "They were the IS-wheelers of their day," said Phineas Sprague, former Portland Yacht Services on Portland Harbor, whose houses long placed Maine waters for fun and profit. "Small boats were the pickup trucks. If you wanted to do anything, you had to have a boat." (Commercial) boats, and greenery on a boat no more.

The most ambitious and popular new program started in Portland was the Portland Sea Scouts, which, although under the sponsorship of the Boy Scouts Marine Pier-Tree Council, looks like a traditional scout program, is in a class of its own. "The Sea Scouts are all into dinghy sailing," said Shawn Cole, who formerly worked with the Community Counseling. "It's a special program. It's a little like a high school, with an eye to producing some Olympic sailors." (Commercial) boats, and greenery on a boat no more.

3, which he looks forward to sailing this season.

"The Force is pretty strong. I like playing," he said. "And I really love working on the boats," Cole said. But he's often so busy, he and his wife, the Saxony, and eventually ended up with a job at Portland Yacht Service. From there, he plans to attend Maine Maritime Academy, counting on that institution to make up what he'd lose by going back to work.

For Sea Scout coach Hughes, it's not quite as simple. He gave his first boat as a Christmas gift in 2004, but he's not in a position to buy a "bargain" used boat, as a 14-foot J-15 feels a bit small, and he'd hate to imagine making the rest of the payment.

This money he just invested in a 14-foot Force 30s. With the help of a boatbuilding neighbor, he rehabilitated the Penguin, which he sold for a profit and is using to buy a 14-foot Force 30s. This is a good thing to have around. In 2004 Olympic trials, Hughes went from the USM sailing team to compete last year with the sailing team at University of Wales, where he attended grad school. Now he's back, trying to find the funding for the Olympic trials.

"I feel sailing skill is about 5 percent of the equation," he said. About half of his day, Hughes is building boats to make it happen. A broader concern is how the city of Portland will deal with a new crop of boating aid, a number of whom should increase rapidly if the new programs come to pass. The city has no plan to build a boat for the public use, which is allowed at the public dock. Just north of 12th Ave, in Scarborough, marks the number of occupied moorings increase from 33 to 50 in 2007 and 50 in 2008.

At war with democracy: Is the media just a propaganda tool?

SETH BERGER

The idea that the media, our government, and our economy are deeply interrelated is well recognized. Yet the diversity of viewpoints and perspectives that are presented in the media is often seen as a positive force in society. However, as the media become more concentrated and more dominated by corporate interests, the potential for bias and manipulation is also increased. In this article, the author argues that the media has become a propaganda tool for big business, and that this has had a negative impact on American democracy.

Theresa Chung

I read your article with great interest. I believe that the media has a responsibility to provide accurate and unbiased information to the public. However, as the media become more concentrated, it is often difficult to determine which sources are reliable. I am concerned that the media may be promoting a particular agenda, rather than providing a balanced perspective on issues.

Free stuff for homeless kids

I am very concerned about the treatment of homeless children in our society. It is important that we provide them with the resources they need to lead healthy and productive lives. I believe that the government should take steps to ensure that all children, regardless of their housing situation, have access to the opportunities and resources they need to succeed.

Homeless youth exploited

I am very concerned about the treatment of homeless youth in our society. It is important that we provide them with the resources they need to lead healthy and productive lives. I believe that the government should take steps to ensure that all children, regardless of their housing situation, have access to the opportunities and resources they need to succeed.

Letters

Karen Jones

I would like to agree with your point about the media's role in shaping public opinion. I believe that the media should strive to provide accurate and balanced information to the public, rather than promoting a particular agenda.

Nadz cops

I am concerned about the treatment of police officers in our society. It is important that we provide them with the resources they need to perform their duties safely and effectively. I believe that the government should take steps to ensure that all police officers have access to the training and resources they need to succeed.

I’D have to be dead to miss the University of Southern Maine. I’d have to die at the least on one of Portland’s many four-lane bridges over the Presumpscot River or the York County line. But for the time being, I’m left to spend my college days in the dorms, which are as small as their inhabitants. Now I’m living back at home, but the smallness of the space is offset by the fact that I’m no longer in the throes of five o’clock traffic. At the same time, I’m aware that I have to do more than just sit around the house and watch television. I have to find a way to make money and live on my own. It’s not easy, but it’s necessary. I’m trying to find a job, but I haven’t had much success so far. I’m getting frustrated, but I’m not giving up. I’m just trying to be patient and keep looking. I know I’ll find something eventually. In the meantime, I’m trying to make the best of things. I’m trying to stay positive and keep my head up. It’s not easy, but it’s necessary. I’m trying to stay focused and keep my eyes on the prize. I know I’ll find something eventually. I’m trying to be patient and keep looking. I know I’ll find something eventually. It’s not easy, but it’s necessary. The 1980s are over, but bands like local legends War of the Roses can still be heard. The band's Theatrical Tour is currently in full swing, with a high school gym full of fans cheering for their favorite 1980s band. The tour is accompanied by a new album, featuring a range of tracks from the band's heyday.

Friday night, the band is set to perform at the Portland Civic Center, with a special appearance by the legendary Nile Rodgers. Fans are expected to pack the arena, ready to relive the glory days of the 1980s.

Saturday night, the band heads to the State House, where they will be joined by special guests from the local scene. The night promises to be an exciting event for fans of all ages.

Sunday, the band wraps up the tour with a final performance at the Portland Civic Center. With a line-up that includes some of the best acts from the 1980s, this is sure to be one of the most memorable events of the year.

Maine Pride
friday, June 14-saturday, June 15

The Portland Pride Festival is expected to bring more than 50,000 people to the city's waterfront Saturday for the gay pride parade and celebration. The festival, which began in 1983, is one of the largest in the country.

The parade, set to begin at 11 a.m., features participants from all walks of life, including members of the community, local businesses, and organizations. The parade route begins at Commercial Street and proceeds along Commercial Street, Congress Street, and India Street, ending at the Casco Bay Bridge.

The festival also includes a variety of events and activities, including a street fair, musical performances, and a parade of floats and marching bands. The festival is free to the public and is open to people of all ages and backgrounds.

Gay Men's Chorus presents "A Celebration of Music!" at Monument Square at 11 a.m., presided over by Donald Trump. The program will feature a variety of musical performances, including an a cappella choir, a drag queen, and a drag queen impersonator. Tix: $12-$14.

COCKETTES

A Feature Length Documentary by David Weissman and Bill Weber

OPENING NIGHT GALA

Thursday June 20th at 7pm
Nickelodeon Theatre

Post Screening Reception at UNA's Wine Bar
with Peabody Festival Drink Specials!

One of the hottest films at Sundance 2002!!! As the psychedelic San Francisco of the '60s began evolving into the gay San Francisco of the '70s, The Cockettes, a flamboyant ensemble of hippies decked out in gender-bending drag and tons of glitter for a series of legendary shows that featured elaborate costumes, rebellious sexuality and exuberant chaos. The Cockettes inspired the glitter rock era of David Bowie, Elton John, the New York Dolls, and the campy extravaganzas of Bette Midler and The Rocky Horror Picture Show.
