Yes, Oleksiak describes her house in the Portland suburbs as "a split foyer, nothing special, suburbia." Oleksiak owns more than two dozen pieces of taxidermy. Everything from a kudu to a Russian boar's head stares down at visitors. There's a cow's head right above my computer, and she didn't say a word. So I knew.

Do you ever decorate the taxidermy?
At Christmas I put some ribbons and a big bow on the kudu, and you could see it through the window. Some people would stand out front pretending they were walking their dog and stare in. Have you ever done any taxidermy? Some people would stand out front yourself?
No, I don't like opening animals. I don't like cleaning chickens. I wouldn't even step on bugs.

How the Portland School Committee flunked at protecting kids, informing the public and following the law

By Laura Conway

Seven months after school officials began investigating allegations of misconduct against a teacher at Reiche Community School, five months after the investigation was first covered in the press, and three weeks after local police opened their own inquiry into charges the teacher had allowed students to kiss and fondle her legs, Portland School Committee Chairman David Ripley said he never knew about the situation except what the school department had told him.

"The only thing we know is about the letter that was put in her file," Ripley said. "They told us at the point that sometimes I wonder whether we should be brought into the process sooner, simply because it wreaks ridiculousness to have to take calls from the public when something egregious, and we, who are the school committee are supposed to oversee the system, have to stand there and say, 'I don't know.'"

Ripley explained he needed to keep distance from the investigation because the school department had a good reason for it. And yet Ripley and his fellow committee members had never been told there was any matter of blame against Kelly L. Reiche, a Portland teacher who since 1995 has been accused of a range of alleged offenses, including fondling male students in her classroom and groups in the hallways.

Last month, the school department concluded the investigation, determining "there is no evidence‖ to support the allegations, Ripley said. "The pendulum of suspicion swings away from [the teacher],‖ he said.

Superintendent of Schools Mary Jane McCalmon said she had no obligation beyond reporting the allegations to the Department of Human Services. "I don't know what they did with it," she said. "I don't have that responsibility."

Supervisor of Languages Margarette MansourAli, a member of the Muslim Council of Maine, said Portland's student body is diverse, and the school district is committed to providing a safe and inclusive environment for all students.

Schools and school districts are required to report allegations of harassment and discrimination to the Department of Human Services, and to provide support and resources to students who may have been affected.

We're asking people from Bosnia, Somalia, Yemen and Canada to come to Portland and help us work together to make sure all of our students feel safe and welcome in our schools.

We're all aware of how children try to cope on their own. It's difficult to imagine the challenges they face day to day.

"We're talking about people who are fresh from conflict and from countries where the whole idea of democracy is a new concept."

According to one contra-

MUSLIM COMMUNITY AGREED: "Some of the messages we get from the Bosnian School are not what we expect," said Victoria Mares-Hershey, executive director of the Muslim Council of Maine. "We're not asking people to forget their culture, but we want to make sure everyone feels welcome and safe in our schools."

"We believe in the power of education to bridge divides and build understanding," said Mares-Hershey. "We're here to support our students and their families, and to create a welcoming and inclusive environment for all."

"Solomon would have a hard time getting out of this one. [Superintendent McCaig] has even admitted herself -- and she's been a superintendent for something like seven years -- that this is the most horridous issue she's ever been faced with."

I demand a tax break
Forget BW. What about me?

JASON WILKINS

Inspired by the business success of Maine’s largest employer, I demand a tax break. As we all know, BW & Associates—a small, local, but highly successful architectural firm—is one of the most profitable businesses in the state. It is reported that BW has earned $1 million (in gross income) over the last six months, and that it is now poised to double its profits. Yet, despite their success, BW is not paying its fair share of taxes. This is unconscionable.

Several local enterprises depend upon us: vendors, bookstores, sellers of spiral notebooks, Goodwill, several small businesses that rely on the BW ecosystem. The BW employees and owners treat everyone like a human being, not a commodity. I was not surprised that this business, one of the most successful in the state, is not paying its fair share of taxes.

I demand a tax break for BW. I demand a tax break. I demand a tax break.

Why regulate street performers when the street takes care of itself?

LENNY LANE

Does Portland really need to regulate its street performers, as some Old Port businesses are proposing? The solution, according to some Old Port proprietors, would only cost a bureaucratic cloud over a makeshift flat, if you look closely.

To work your way into the locals' good graces, be well groomed and have the right look. If you look like the street, you'll be treated as one of the locals. But if you look like a hipster, you'll be treated as such. So dress the part. That's what makes Portland so special. And that's what makes Portland so unique.

While the streets of Portland are lined with coffee shops and boutiques, the music scene is alive and well. From the local bars to the national acts, Portland has something for everyone. And that's what makes it so special. And that's what makes Portland so unique.

WEEK 1

The return of classic rock

Much like The Lion King showed in the box office that the classic rock sound would return — though it never really went away, especially in Portland. Those are the kind of movies that you can see, and be entertained by, for a price. But the lion would be the star of the first time around.

That doesn’t mean there’s not still value in a new band doing the classic rock sound, though. Apartment Three, a Boston quartet playing in Camden’s Green July 14, provides enough good music to hold the interest of those even if they aren’t classic rock fans.

The band is the original classic rock influence: Bob Dylan, the Grateful Dead and, for a more modern feel, Matchless. But on their debut, "Some Miles to Go," they sound more like The Dave Matthews Band, their sound formed with a similar jazzy sophistication.

The vocals, by guitarist Nick Curnoe and Front Matthews, are in the right key and not too high. They aren’t quite strong or atmospheric, and there isn’t always the feel to their best songs that’s refreshing and enjoyable.

Still, the playing by all four members (plus an occasional keyboard) is skilled and subtle enough to keep the band’s morose gothic nature from becoming too heavy.

There’s the most original band in the world, but they do prove that one can make beautiful music without bringing in the past — and being a throwback.

Apartment Three plays July 10 at Earth’s, 15 Brown St. 773-1734.

Totally frogadelic

Another classic rock-inspired band is Atomic Frog, a quartet playing at The Basement July 12. Atomic Frog was formed in Arizona, but recently moved to the southern Maine area.

Against the trend, but I’m not prepared to enthusiastic welcome them. That’s almost a high rate of talented musicians to putting faces in Portland, and if I want to encourage any more bands to move up here, then exciting their metabolism.

Still, Atomic Frog shouldn’t be run out of town. Their image may seem hyper—

The music combines the bloated quality of Led Zeppelin with the petulance of the Pumpkins, a combination that nearly overwhelms the Joshen's sound. Though . Apartment Three, a Boston quartet playing at Free Street Taverna on July 12, every one of those two bands with a bit of funk thrown in .

Fly away

There are the bands that put modern spin on classic rock, the ones that sound like they’re not quite enough difference between Smashing Pumpkins and Led Zeppelin. The New York-based quartet Jojo’s Butterfly, at Free Street Taverna July 12, every one of these two bands with a bit of funk thrown in Unfortunately, on their latest release, the three-song EP "Fierce Ballads" recorded live at CRGB’s, the mix doesn’t work. The band combines the bizarre quality of Zeppelin with the pounding of the Pumpkins, a combination that neatly overwhelms the rock elements.

It’s all performed with energy and skill, but in the end "Fierce Ballads" only proves that a band’s got that’s up to date can’t always be up there.

Jojo’s Butterfly plays July 12 at Free Street Taverna, 128 Free St. 774-1222.

GRANNY'S BURRITOS

Gran's Burritos
6 Exchange Street
Portland, ME 04101

Granny's Burritos opened on February 14, 1995, as the first food stall in downtown Portland and the third outside the Original Rootsback. We let the sun in and let the water out. With luck a little of both. The local and national press seems to have noticed. With the start of our second year in Portland in August of 1996, we had no choice but to move on.

With the swelling of the management, we built our business and our name to the 16 Exchange Street Mall on Exchange Street in the Old Port where we are now open 7 days a week, Monday through Friday from 9 am to 9 pm. Saturday noon to 10 pm and Sunday noon to 9 pm.

Although still a relatively small space, our location is worlds away from Granny Jones' dressing room. We now offer seating, a better atmosphere, and as well as a much more productive kitchen.

MAD SCOOTERS

The news in the Franklin Journal (January 1997) was a file on the back page. In three "Chamberlain" pages. From the front of July 4, a synonymous Zelma Tsoukalas' dispatch was headed. "Winter of the girls face one enemy to the other."

Then who read on "would discover that "If you are doing your thing in great, wintery Jake, you're dead in cold, but if you are taking the right way, the chances are that you are not dying."

Surely the pressing concerns of the down day in Franklin County, one of the closest places to Portland that holds anything like one north north and a short distance south from the national music scene at night. With the Blessing of the 281 Main Street Biddeford 04005

Walking and gawking
A pedestrian art tour

JOE S. MILLER
Published for walking but not everyone is into the free-for-all, the author suggests some loose, and targeted-friendly conversations that encourage you to peer over walls between yourself and the observer, as he puts it, "If you don't look, you can't see it." Personally, I don't see it as an art tour — I find an art tour that offers a sense of freedom and direct engagement with the art itself, as opposed to a passive, spectator-like experience. The author advocates for a more active, interactive approach to art viewing, wherein the observer becomes part of the art-making process, rather than merely an onlooker.

By the way...

An article in The New York Times by Holland Cotter, discussing the work of Deborah Kass, who merges her feminist art with Andy Warhol's pop art, resulting in a unique blend of contemporary art forms. Kass's work is characterized by its use of silkscreen printing on silver paper, creating a striking contrast between the medium and the reflective surface. The exhibition, titled "9 Silver Babes (The Jewish Jackie Print)," runs from July 12 to August 16, with an opening reception scheduled for July 12 from 5:00 to 7:00 pm. The gallery is located at 58 Main St., Brunswick, ME 04011-2016, and can be reached at (207) 729-8238. For more information, visit www.maine.com/ofarrell.
