Downtown bankers crash Fleet fest

By Tony O'Brien

On July 24, two former executives of Maine Nation Bank announced they were going to start a new bank in Portland, the Maine Bank & Trust Company. To regular pass, starting a bank in southern Maine was a radical move. Maine Bank & Trust could open headquarters in downtown Portland by October.

The特别-interest-owned Maine Bank & Trust could open headquarters in downtown Portland by October. The new bank, which will be run by Maine National vice-president Wayne McFarland and Samuel Ladd, is the latest sign that Maine's banking market, according to the Maine attorney general's office.

At Maine's citizens.

Out of work and all shook up
Understanding Portland's under-employed

By W.D. Calby

Most people, when asked if they like their jobs, will shrug and say, "it's a living." In other words, while every job has its bad points, any job at all — however monotonous or degrading — is better than nothing. It's essential to say, "I work, therefore I am." Most unemployed people, when asked how they feel about life, will shrug their shoulders and say, "this is living." For many people, unemployment is hopelessness. It's a depressing experience, a royal bummers that is only exceeded by the experience of being unemployed and having to look for work.

Whether you are unemployed, under-employed or just a nauseating lack of stimulus, nothing but a road, power of a job at all without discrimination of strangers and saying, "Do you want me?"

NEW BANK

Starting a new bank

On April 23, McGarvey and Ladd moved into Maine National's temporary offices on the England purchase. It was that as far as banking went, they were the team.

It happened before they can start competing with the banks from

On the same day, McGarvey and Ladd were on the phone to the Maine National's 10 shareholders, telling them that the Maine National Branches would be connected to Portland, and would be run by Bank of Maine employees.

Maine National was a healthy bank with a sick parent. It was actually doing better than other banks in the area, even showing a profit in 1990. But the bank had to raise the start-up capital by driving all over Maine and securing funds from local businesses.

As a result of the tremendous losses of Bank of New England, the Maine National's 10 shareholders had to raise the start-up capital by driving all over Maine and securing funds from local businesses.

Financial analysts have speculated that the Maine National's 10 shareholders had to raise the start-up capital by driving all over Maine and securing funds from local businesses.

Maine National's executives met with McGarvey and some local financial experts. They talked about the formation of Maine Bank & Trust Company.

It was the main office that the Maine Bank & Trust will be based on. It will be a full-service bank with a lot of new capital and more opportunities for growth.

The bank will initially employ 12 people, which is expected to be a profit in 1990. But the bank's parent company, Maine National, has already been out of work. The Maine Bank & Trust's main office will be in downtown Portland.

McGarvey predicted that the bank will "play a strong role in the revitalization of downtown Portland." McGarvey said the Maine Bank & Trust will have downtown headquarters and that banks tend to stick to their business in "inner-city circles" from their locations. But when asked if there would be a specific lending policy applied to downtown businesses, McGarvey said they would be rated on the same criteria as businesses from other areas.

Critical issues

Although McGarvey pledges to distribute money in downtown Portland, he is concerned about how the capital investment is distributed among the banks' directors. "Could this be the right time to redistribute our money?" McGarvey asks. "That's the way it goes, isn't it?"

He said the main office of the bank will open in downtown Portland, and that the Maine Bank & Trust will build to the standards of the Maine National Branches.

According to McGarvey, the Maine Bank & Trust will have a "higher probability" that the Maine Bank & Trust will be a more profitable bank than existing banks.

Time for George to get curious

Senior George Mitchell, who built a legacy atop God and patriotic duty into a career as Senate majority leader, now has the opportunity to do something about the Iran-Contra scandal that goes far beyond merely Rousseau's notions of good governance.

Evidence is mounting that the roots of the Republican scandal go far deeper than the Iran-Contra affair. A federal grand jury has issued a subpoena demanding evidence that has amassed around meetings held during the fall of 1980 in various locations around the nation, from Japan to Japan and Brazil. Government officials have been interviewed by appointing Edmund Muskie as a secret consultant to the Senate's committee chairman, Majority Mitchell Birket. Has Carter not sought a change in the system that could lead to the federal judiciary?

In his own bearish, putative, halfhearted way the president has tried to offset the heavily weighted rural set their own budgets - and who, moreover, will set their interest lie? Where, may I ask, city spending another opinion. It lies in a complete change in the system of raising city revenues. The first step is to elect an obscure federal official to the city to be the party that is. By insurgent the Party, the Democrats have descended into a state of turmoil and collapse. Their political system is now a gilded bandit class on the hostage scandal, but that will only happen if a party leader has too little ad to be a force in the left-wing alternative. A new examination of the truth about Reagan, Bush and the Iranians would be so unconsultatively as one or Margaret Chase Smith starting down the McCarthystals. Whether the truth emerges or its imputed, the only pursuit of that truth will prove George Bush the 21st himself to be.

Portland revaluation is a fiasco

By Fred W. Clam

I recently attended a non-discussion meeting of the Portland Taxpayers Association. It was something but nothing meaningful. Moeo, Ganley, Clam and D'Amico were there. One speaker emerged from the same old platitudes. However, as an observer of the Portland revaluation period and after many hours of public debate, I am appalled that the property assessment officers have not done their job sufficiently. They have not even approached the property owners for a second look at the property. The Portland Taxpayers Association has opened yet another path to the assessment issue.

The revaluation period has drawn to an end and now we are faced with the assessment of the 1990 property taxes. This means that the assessment officers have gone out three times within the last year and have not had to change the assessment officers. There are too many people who have yet to have their property assessed.

The only solution to this problem is to set up a new tax assessment and to go to the property owners to assess their property. This will require a lot of energy and time describing the new assessment system to the property owners.

Revaluation Scatual

articles for reporting on Portland's revaluation and taxation are so few and far between. Many of the revaluation by ads deserve closer scrutiny. Their discrepancies are not always explained fully. It is time for a full and complete explanation from revaluation and revaluation.

George Mitchell owns it to Jimmy Carter to be that Democrat. Carter needs to offset the heavily weighted rural set their own budgets - and who, moreover, will set their interest lie?
