Union blues

By Bob Young

When three Portland police officers were laid off on July 10, the police union's president said it was a hardball campaign to rescind the layoffs.

Benevolent Association of Police officers were laid off to backpedal on its hardline position. But the campaign has backfired. It has failed to garner public and political support.

"At the police union's suggestion, City Manager Bob Ganley made a decision. It was the police union's call, Ganley's decision," said John Mayo. "We'll speak at the City Council meeting on July 16. We're getting out of our city's long-standing friction with the police union.

In response to the campaign, Ganley said, "We got pushed and we're backpedaling. That's our finale."

Then we're getting out of this, Too.

Solar and electric cars will likely be the backbone of Maine's future transportation systems. But the road from here to there will be confusing and expensive.

By Paul Laffey

June 28's converted 1983 Nissan Sentra now sports a plug.

"We're trying to do something that's no talent can comprehend," said Nobel laureate Eli Wiesel. "I'm a witness to the darkness of the world, the death camps of Poland, and Czechoslovakia."

Inoue, the other hand, made a lot of noise. He was explaining the workings of the electric vehicle he built himself from the hulk of a junked car. It runs on electric (and other alternative-fuel) cars.

"I want to be known as a car that would cross the state to build electric power stations in prominent locations where electric cars could be charged up, as well as a central location to buy and service electric and other alternative-fuel cars.

"I am devoted to doing that with old cars," said Laffey. "It is so important in our way of life that we'd come to a screeching halt."

We are imprisoned by our absolute need for oil.

But Laffey's plan depends almost entirely on a shaky federal grant. If that money doesn't come through, the whole idea of electric cars is off, too.

"The whole idea of electric cars is great," said John Duncan, executive director of the agency that helps plan transportation in Greater Portland. "But there's a lot of infrastructure that needs to be developed first."
Hannaford Bros. will chop 75 jobs from its corporate headquarters in Farmington, Maine. Company officials blamed a recession and stiff competition from wholesale clubs, as well as the recent sale of Hannaford’s Quincy Super Store chain.

Portland has made the short list in Steere & Weeks’ search for a place to site a newspaper recycling plant for the hearing impaired. The company is studying sites in Bayside Street and adjacent to the new ferry terminal off the Oak Street. Locals, artists and Penobscot Bay also made the cut, as did two area New Hampshire locations.

CMP rates have jumped 27 percent since 1986, including the utility’s most recent 2.7 percent rate increase, which was approved by the state Public Utilities Commission on July 10. In 1990 and 1991, CMP paid stockholders $87.5 million in dividends, according to company spokesman Clark Earnest.

Bath Iron Works in Portland won a $9.5 million Navy contract to repair the guided missile frigate The founder of Moody’s Diner died on July 15. Perry B. Moody died at age 92. Moody started Maine’s most famous roadside attraction in 1924 with a takeout stand in his Waldoboro home. Moody’s Diner was built nine years later, and started as a roadside stand.

The Navy’s highest job has gone to the son of a Bath iron Workers executive. Perry B. Moody, founder of the roadside attraction, was named acting secretary of the Navy on July 7. After the announcement, BPW denied that a deal would be made to include Moody’s in the company’s Bath facility because of lack of work in Portland.

The Maine Arts Commission has expanded its outreach to include artists who are hearing impaired. The Maine State Housing Authority will increase the deadline for its loans, support of which varies with interest rates as low as 4.35 percent, through August 1. SEPRA’s director said a one-time boost in demand for the loans allowed the extension.

The police union campaign simmered in the heat of Ganley's decision and continued to simmer in a new advertisement in the last minutes of the Maine Sunday Telegram.

The union charged that the city has not been proactive in the hiring of new police officers, that they could not get into the pool, and that they would not be able to take the test.

In January 2006, the union called for a new police union to be formed and the hiring of new police officers to be stopped. Ganley said that the union was not proactive in the hiring of new police officers and that they could not get into the pool.

The police union also said that the city had not been proactive in the hiring of new police officers, that they could not get into the pool, and that they would not be able to take the test.

The police union campaign has argued that these layoffs are dangerous because of the high number of police officers in the city. Police departments also argue that they should get more police officers because they are more important than other city employees.

This ain’t no party

Gov. McKernan’s nominee to be the state’s next human services commissioner appeared headed to a tough confirmation hearing. McKernan has chosen his former legal assistant, Jen Sheehan, to take over the troubled department. For the nomination must first win support from the Legislature’s Human Services Committee, as well as affirmation by the State Senate.

"I’m not saying she’s not going to get it," said committee co-chairman Tim O’Mara of Portland. "But I think there’ll be some hard questions asked.”

It’s difficult to believe committee members such as O’Mara won’t see the confirmation hearing as a platform to attack the Republican McKernan administration’s handling of the Department of Human Services. But McKernan insisted his nominees were not politically motivated. "We need to see what’s behind the scenes," O’Mara said. In April she was shifted back in DHS to head the Bureau of Child and Family Services, which had been severely criticized for its handling of the rape of a baby in Portland and the death of an infant in Auburn.

As for being "an unknown quantity," that could work in Sheehan’s favor. "The Legislature seems to be comfortable," O’Mara said, "and those with whom she interacted could be described as respected." But whatever it is that she’s not, she should be wary of votes on the other side.\n
Looting for the simple life

The League of Women Voters of Maine and the Maine Senate sought to limit the amount of work the Legislature, setting its stand on 20 issues. The completed forms will be used to publish a "Vote Guide" in the Portland Telegram.

There were no signs of a political move for its handling of the rape of a baby in Portland and the death of an infant in Auburn.

"It’s almost un-American these days to argue that complex political questions are chosen because they reflect issues that are most relevant and important for the state," said a league official. "We’re seeking a return to more straightforward, common-sense answers to the issues we face."
ELECTRIC CARS

The idea of running a car on something other than refined fossil fuels is not a new one; inventors have proposed cars that run on everything from solar energy to vegetable oil. But the development of electric vehicles has been significantly impeded by the high cost of battery development and the limitations placed on the limited kilometer range of these vehicles. However, with advances in battery technology, electric vehicles are becoming a more viable option for the future of transportation.

that could be plugged into a solar garage or something. That's where we're waiting for the market to develop some products for the average consumer car at all."
"The Japanese market is the shining light right now. It has a large consumer base and we're seeing more consumer interest. The Japanese automotive manufacturers are putting a lot of money into developing electric vehicles. Some models are already on the market, such as the Nissan Leaf and the Toyota Prius. But right now, especially with the high cost of electric vehicles, it's not feasible for the average consumer to make this switch."
Because of these potentially huge environmental and economic savings anticipated, page 10 notes, "the political pressure to develop electric vehicles is increasing. The U.S. Department of Energy and major automakers have signed onto a $260 million electric vehicle research program. General Motors and Ford have each built electric vehicles, and they promise to make them more affordable and reliable in the future." And the state of California has done the U.S. government one better by setting a goal for its purchase and development of electric cars. Federal mandates to clean up air is a tougher highway for electric cars, but a quick check on the state's new electric car offers promise of $2,500 to each new owner of a clean electric vehicle."
"There may also be a "green backlash" following against the cars. Some critics argue that electric cars merely replace one source of fossil fuel pollution—exhaust emissions—with another: the electricity produced from the burning of coal, natural gas or oil."
Energy expert Flanerlitzt strongly disagrees. "Electric cars are the future, and they are coming sooner than you think," Flamerlitzt said. "The technology is already here, and it's only a matter of time before we see widespread adoption of electric vehicles." He went on to explain that electric cars can provide significant benefits, such as reduced air pollution and lower greenhouse gas emissions. However, he also acknowledged that there are still some challenges to overcome, such as the limited range of current electric vehicles and the need for charging infrastructure. He concluded by stating that electric vehicles are a promising solution to our energy and environmental challenges."
It’s time to build cleanere, greener cars

Electric cars are good news for both the community and the environment. And Minoturus will be one of the very first cities in the world to have an electric car service. There is much to be said for building cleaner, greener cars now.

Electric vehicles make sense

EVs are made from materials that have not been known to cause harm to future generations. They are made of materials that generate far less waste than traditional vehicles. Electric vehicles will also reduce the number of accidents caused by distracted driving.

These savings add up. The World Resources Institute in Washington, D.C. has estimated that electric cars could reduce America’s greenhouse gas footprint by as much as one-quarter of the country’s entire output. This is due to a significant reduction in the amount of fossil fuels burned to power their engines.

Making sensible electric vehicles

Fund the Maine Energy Coalition plan: Campaign for clean, green energy in Greater Portland. And though we applaud the energy-savvy thinking of the Maine Technical College — to build and enter an electric car in the Tour de Boréal — the real puzzle is that this innovative project isn’t being supported by anyone. It’s time to fix this Maine’s mistake.

Tour de Boréal is a project that is designed to inspire people to use electric vehicles in their daily lives. The Tour de Boréal is an electric vehicle challenge that is held in Portland, Maine. The goal of the Tour de Boréal is to encourage people to use electric vehicles as their primary mode of transportation.

The main idea is to get people thinking about the benefits of using electric vehicles. By doing this, we hope to increase the number of people who choose to use electric vehicles as their primary mode of transportation. Accomplish the positive

Life is to be lived individu­ally. A person can make the most of their life by doing what is good for them, finding their own values or those of another human. When you live this way, nothing aﬀords a greater sense of self than the self-awareness of your own being.

First, it is important that you understand what makes you special. It is easy to feel that you are special when you are with others, but it is diﬃcult to feel that you are special when you are alone. It is diﬃcult to feel that you are special when you are alone.

Two others have a right to let you know. One is the person you are trying to be in the world. The other is the person you are trying to be in the world. One is the person you are trying to be in the world. The other is the person you are trying to be in the world.

There is plenty of precedent for this sort of project. We’ll see how people respond to this challenge.

Donna Giroux

Becoming CBW

Jesus is being mocked for being bold about his beliefs. He isn’t the first to want of a prophetic CBW (1989:1). First it was 1987, then ‘89, ‘92 and now ‘96. Each time the role of the “prophet” grows more and more demanding. Who will come up with a daily voice that accurately describes what is happening in their world?

The date of the end of the apocalyptic age is being delayed. It is being postponed because our people have not yet reached the point of realizing the end of the world. People are being encouraged to do more for the cause of God. The date of the end of the apocalyptic age is being delayed. It is being postponed because our people have not yet reached the point of realizing the end of the world. People are being encouraged to do more for the cause of God.

Yoder, Nalley

In addition to the personal savings that can be achieved by using electric vehicles, there is a significant environmental benefit. Electric vehicles produce much less pollution than traditional vehicles. This is because electric vehicles do not produce emissions.

Blurring the passage of time

Annotating the movement of change

The works of Lynn Butler have been labeled to that of the French Impressionists. This is an interesting comparison because the French Impressionist photographers were artists who were not afraid to experiment in capturing real life and capturing the essence of their times.

Lynn Butler's photos are also impressionistic, however her patients and their problems are subject to illness and death. Her goal is to capture the fleeting nature of illness and the fight for life. Likewise, the French Impressionists were also capturing the fleeting nature of life.

Lynn Butler's works are rooted in the lives of her patients. They are living examples of the struggle of life and death. Her work is a reflection of the struggle of man and woman.

Maine Physicians for Social Responsibility want you to know:

Russia stopped. France stopped. So why is the U.S. still testing?

CONGRESS COULD END U.S. NUCLEAR TESTING

France and Russia have temporarily halted their nuclear testing programs. Meanwhile, the U.S. has already exploded four bombs this year.

On June 4, the House voted to suspend nuclear testing. 62 Senators, including Senator George Mitchell, are co-sponsoring similar legislation in the Senate.

If the U.S. Stops Testing:

- Russia and France will extend their moratoria on testing.
- The former Soviet Union can implement much-needed reforms instead of maintaining its military establishments.
- The U.S. will be a leader in global nonproliferation efforts.

WARNING: 250,000 physicians say nuclear testing is hazardous to the world's health, environment and security.

Why Pay for an Arms Race That's Over?

The U.S. has celebrated the end of the Cold War. But American taxpayers are still paying the bills. The U.S. is spending $600 million per year to explode nuclear weapons in Nevada.

Let's Not Blow This Opportunity.

From every perspective—political, environmental, health—the answer is clear: The U.S. must stop testing nuclear weapons.

Senator Cohen Hasn't Yet Made Up His Mind On This Issue. Let's Help Him.

Please clip and mail this entire ad, urging him to co-sponsor the Nuclear Testing Moratorium Act.
