Nancy Crowell, Scarborough's head librarian, spent last weekend standing outside a supermarket, asking shoppers to sign a petition aimed at repealing South Portland's new obscenity ordinance. Crowell has also spent time walking the phones, attending town council meetings and appearing on radio talk shows in an effort to keep Scarborough from adopting a similar ordinance.

Crowell believes that the ordinances infringe on First Amendment rights, raise the specter of thought police patrolling local neighborhoods, and might even lead to the censoring of library books.

Meanwhile, Scarborough resident Pauline Michaud has been drumming up support for her town's proposed ordinance. Michaud argues that the ordinance will protect the town's good character. She also maintains that the ordinance will not lead to the banning of any library books - or censorship of other literature and art.

"One reason they don't make sense is because both sides don't see a lot of evidence," said Richard Moss, a Colby College history professor and expert on obscenity and culture. Another reason is that the battle is not so much between liberals and conservatives. Rather, it's a centuries-old cultural war between "rationalists" and "communitarians," Moss said.

Steeped in the principles of the Constitution, the rationalists believe that under the free and unfettered exchange of ideas, the best ideas and values will prevail, and that those ideas are often forged in response to repugnant ideas. The communitarians, on the other hand, trace their heritage to a Puritanical belief that citizens should band together to keep evil from their midst, and those who disagree should leave.

"The two sides are debating from absolute stands, and there's not a lot of room to compromise," Moss said. Indeed, South Portland's Mayor Jim Soule recently told a Maine Civil Liberties Union lawyer, "Take your hide-behind-the-First Amendment civil rights and go elsewhere, Mr. ACLU."

To keep debate from growing more divisive, both sides might be wise to look at how their neighbors in Saco and Portland approached obscenity ordinances - and which approach has proved most effective.

Thirty rapes have been reported in Portland this year, as of July 31, matching last year's rate, when a record 32 rapes were reported. (An average of 22 rapes were reported per year from 1985 through 1998.)

One of the most recent reported rapes (July 21) took place in a popular location, leading police into the Forrest Run location, 30th Street and Inner Harbor Road. But the police haven't found any suspects.

This year, only three have allegedly been committed by strangers, according to Portland Police Department rape statistics. The other rapes involved acquaintances, boyfriends, ex-boyfriends, relatives and babysitters. Just under half of the victims were juveniles.

Sue Jones, executive director of the Rape Crisis Center in Portland, attributed the increase in rapes since 1991 to two main factors. "All kinds of criteria are on the rise," she said. "We have a better chance of reporting rapes, thanks to education programs like rape kits, which help track the stories.

It's been tremendous. Not recent assaults are supported. "We received calls from 300 people who said they were assaulted in York and Cumberland counties last year, and only 38 of those individuals reported the assault to the police. That's right across the national average of 49 percent (false reported assaults)," Jones said.

A teenage girl's report led to rape charges against a former star athlete in South Portland. Damien Inverso, 18, is charged with raping the girl in the woods near a party he attended on June 5. "There definitely was a sexual encounter," between the victim and Inverso. Police Chief Bob Means said, and evidence of the encounter was found.

The victim, a recent graduate and former member of South Portland's Track team, is expected to enter a plea in Cumberland County Superior Court later this month.

Al Diamon was sacked from his job at WGAN radio. The station pulled the plug on his talk show Aug. 9 after 18 rocky months. "We had to make a decision," said Mike Davis, station manager, "and that is to move on with the show's new direction.

Diamon claimed his bosses only liked his "smart" shows, the ones about pop culture and how music has been one of the most "smart" shows. "I was told to "stop being so straightforward,"" Diamon said.

In a letter to the public, Davis said, "We have to make the show's new direction."

"It is a sad necessity for Diamon," the station said. "He is a great talent with a national audience and a great show.

Peter O'Donnell is launching his campaign to replace state Sen. Jerry Conley. O'Donnell meets as an open meeting to meet the Legislators next year. O'Donnell is a Democrat and Portland's first mayor, who earlier ran against Rep. Howard Berman, R-Airport. O'Donnell, who is running for state Senate, received calls from Portland's philanthropist, the Wonderland and the Bayside neighborhoods, and six other Maine political leaders.

"Jerry and I clearly have a lot of similar visions," said O'Donnell, about coming to the district and running in a competitive district. "O'Donnell's city council term expires next year. Conley, who was serving his second term in the Senate, after five terms in the House, said he wants to spend more time with his wife and his private law practice.

Bills and pieces of mammal tissue were turned up by scientists in Southport, A controversy about the body is said to have been brought to light by doing a post-mortem on a whale where a 63-year-old wooden mammal was discovered.

The whale, a blue whale of the Maine State Museum, was removed as a beginning to understand what they find any new of the mammal. The dig is expected to wrap up by Aug. 27.

The price tag topped $2 million for renovations to Portland's Hallidie Field, according to City Manager Bob Casey. Improvements to the home of Portland's new minor league baseball team were originally pegged to cost $1.5 million. But Casey said unforeseen expenses have driven the bill up.

City Councilor Mike McGovern criticized Casey for not approving additional $200,000 in stadium improvements without first getting council approval. "I don't want to re-props the plan," Casey said. "But I had no choice because the team owner said they would reduce their time at the stadium from 10 to 8 games."
Police hire NAACP official

As an effort to improve relations with minority communities, Portland's police department has hired a NAACP official. The new hire, John O'Donnell, will report directly to Chief Mark Dion. He will also assist in the department's Bias Crime Unit, and will report directly to the chief.

Money over love

The 1994 election is still fifteen months away, and Senator George Mitchell's gold-plated campaign fund has already taken in more money than anyone in Maine has ever spent on a political race. As of July 31, Mitchell's money bags held $270,000, and he promises to keep laying out the big bucks until the last drop of blood.

Mitchell's rule is: "We go in for the kill..." in a beaucoup, perhaps, but not in trying to bring the Senate majority under the control of a single party. "I believe it's important for the Senate to be independent, to be strong, and to speak for the people," Mitchell said. "I think it's important for the Senate to be free to cast independent votes, and to be able to speak for the people in a way that is independent of the president."

"I think it's important for the Senate to have the ability to do its job in a way that is independent of the president," Mitchell said. "I think it's important for the Senate to be able to speak for the people and to be able to do its job in a way that is independent of the president."

Mitchell wants to spend as much as possible on his re-election campaign. He believes that some minorities and perhaps even some whites might oppose it, but he expects his campaign to be successful. Mitchell also wants to prevent Bennett, Bemis or a road killed skunk from getting into the Senate. He has a tremendous amount of work to do, and he wants to do it right.

There's no evidence that the obscenity ordinances that have recently surfaced in Scarborough, South Portland and Saco come from an organized effort by the Christian right or any other morality group. Instead, they've been prompted by one sex shop's efforts to open a branch store first in Scarborough, then in Saco.

Scarborough residents first reacted last fall, when the First Amendment Adult Book & Video Store of Farmingdale asked to open a store on Route 1. Within a week, town councilors approved a zoning ordinance aimed at keeping the First Amendment store out of the town. The new ordinance said adult book and video stores couldn't be located within 1,000 feet of a residence, school, church, town-owned building, park or playground.

The ordinance apparently worked. Pauline Sturtevant, who owns the adult store, said the 1,000-foot rule would force her to locate her store "out in the Scarborough Marsh." So Sturtevant's zero a few miles south in a site on Route 1 in Saco. In turn, Saco's city council adopted a zoning ordinance that prohibited stores from having private driveways for viewing videotapes. Sturtevant's Farmingdale store has such a driveway and he wanted them in his new store. The beach has effectively blocked his bid to locate in Saco.

Pauline Michaud was not convinced that Scarborough's new 1,000-foot rule was enough to keep sex shops out of town. So she asked the town council to pass an ordinance. Like Portland's, the ordinance was to keep sex shops "out in the user-friendly environment." The council had effectively thwarted his bid to locate in Saco.

Scarborough's ordinance committee devised a regulation that narrowed Portland's. But a majority of town councilors opposed it on the grounds that it threatened the library and would ultimately be ineffective. "It's something we should have done in Portland," assured Town Council Chairman Gary Lorfano, "but if we are to have a 1,000-foot rule that's going to be a law." But instead of killing the ordinance, councilors voted on August 12 to send it back to the committee for more revision that would make it "work." From the Library. The revised ordinance will have a public hearing and another town council vote.

Meanwhile, South Portland Mayor Sue Sorensen decided to keep sex shops from locating in her city. Sorensen also believed that an obscenity ordinance would pass a "Mercury." The business is located 1,000 feet from a residence, church, school, or playground. She explained, "If you were the resident of a sex shop, you would go to a court for a community where you believe it is a problem from the library."

But instead of killing the ordinance, councilors voted on August 12 to send it back to the committee for more revision that would screen the ordinance to conform to the Miller vs. California court. Various parties have challenged the ordinance, which has been upheld by the Maine Supreme Court.

Various parties have challenged the ordinance, which has been upheld by the Maine Supreme Court.
The ordinance hasn't existed for even two years, yet many people argue that it is already infringing on their freedoms. While the ordinance was intended to regulate the sale and display of obscenity, many feel that it is being used to suppress other forms of speech as well. The ordinance also requires that any business selling adult products must be at least 1,000 feet from a school, church, or hospital, which many feel is an unreasonable distance.

Compromising positions

The ordinance was challenged in court, and many business owners felt that it was being used to stifle their free speech. The ordinance was also criticized for being overly broad and vague, and many felt that it was being used to target specific groups of people.

The ordinance was ultimately struck down by the court, and many felt that this was a victory for free speech. However, the ordinance was quickly replaced by a similar one, and the debate continues to this day.

The main argument against the ordinance is that it infringes on the First Amendment, while the supporters argue that it is necessary to prevent the spread of obscene materials. The ordinance has been challenged in court several times, and each time it has been upheld, but the debate continues.

Positive bleeds rock and roll
Buy yourself a better opportunity
And then go for broke.
That sums up Positives's game-plan since Epic dropped the Boston rock quintet after its self-produced album "Home Sweet Home" in 1991. This June, the group released a first-rate, first single called "Home Sweet Home" on its own label, Smashing Records. It's the album the members always wanted to make, the one that finally represents their collective musical ethics.

And they made it themselves — from scratch. First, the band constructed a new studio and rented the necessary gear. Thus equipped, members released a pent-up blast of music written in the wake of their big-label disappointment. Using techniques they had developed while in the studio with Epic, they recorded, engineered and produced all the sessions themselves. The end product captures the energy and clarity of people who recognize the value of fleeting opportunities. "It could always be the last time you do anything," said Dave Herlihy, lead vocalist for the band, "We let it all hang out, and it's a good feeling to have had the CD come back in boxes — the embodiment of all that time, energy and karma... It's the American Dream — to play guitar and have your own business. Why not just make it happen ourselves?"

Education and Careers Go Hand in Hand at USM

More than ever, the pursuit of higher education for many students is tied to finding a career after graduation. Students at the University of Southern Maine (USM) take advantage of the broad location in Maine to make them aware of their situation while they work and to enhance their skills while they get an education.

What are you going to do for work when you graduate in four years? That's what Southern Maine's career counselor, career specialist at the University of Southern Maine, students are beginning to experience in settings where their potential appears to be, and to gain entry-level experience that will be required and future careers.

Experienced graduates with related Majors have gone on to be able to work at higher positions by graduation. Men have the best job opportunities, of course. Men training to succeed in the teaching profession.

Both are possible at USM, because new programs in Cooperative Education, funded by the U.S. Department of Education, match students with jobs in their chosen academic Major fields while they pursue their undergraduate degree.

USM Cooperative Education Program is designed for students from a broad range of academic disciplines, not just those in professional fields of study. Lorraine Bous, director of Cooperative Education, says there is a variety of opportunity for students. "Many majors think they're just for business or technology majors," she said. "But that's not the case. Cooperative Education means different things to different students.

Other credits have been approved, students can review the job listings and select positions of interest. Jobs are tied to academic courses to ensure a learning component in the program. Program counselors help with the application process.

After a student has been interviewed and selected by an employer, a faculty advisor works with the student to develop a "learning contract" that outlines the learning that is expected to take place at the job site that relates to theory learned in the classroom.

The learning contract forms the basis for awarding academic credits for the job experience, typically three credits.

Students and employers who are interested in more information on the cooperative education program at USM, or would like to arrange an interview, should call 780-6499.

A Unique Resource

The Long-Term Care Management Institute at Saint Joseph's College (LTCMI), the Board of Saint Joseph's College in Standish, Maine, approved a new, multidisciplinary Long Term Care Management Program to address issues dealing with long-term care delivery, management and education. It's primary goal is to be a career resource.

The Institute has as its mission to enhance the care and improve the delivery of long-term care services through the focusing of research, education, advocacy and in-service education of long-term care management.

LTCMI is a center for the collection, coordination, and dissemination of information and education in the long-term care field. The Institute's functions include:

Education and training of long-term care managers
Professional consultation
Research concerning long-term care delivery
Publication of pertinent information
Discussion of long-term care issues
Active participation in the formulation and development of long-term care policy Advocacy on behalf of people using long-term care.

The Institute is funded primarily through a combination of grants, tuition, and fees for services, such as special training programs or consultations.

It is now involved in a research demonstration grant and an education contract. The demonstration is the collection, development and data information systems for the home health care industry. And the education contract consists of an agreement with the Medical Care Associates of America (MCAA) to design and administer a new management education program for all of the MCAA's 200 home health care agencies throughout the country.

Institute staff have published articles in numerous professional journals and have made numerous professional presentations. The Institute also has conducted a series of rounds with agencies, and the Institute's rapidly growing national network of all segments of the long-term care system will provide education and support for project ideas, and will use these to provide assistance to network members.

On September 1st, President of Saint Joseph's College, says "the institute will allow us to provide a focus for innovation and creative efforts and solutions in the field of long-term care management."

The Institute is currently enrolling in long-term care courses and has already begun to plan for a regulation in the field of home health care. Long-Term Care, Home Health Care...and where their aptitudes lie.

Students are expected to participate in creating and planning new jobs. A management class is scheduled for this fall semester.

An affordable alternative for those after-school hours.

Children enrolled in the YMCA programs enjoy games, arts and crafts, field trips, swimming at the YMCA, and many other activities that will truly enrich their lives by introducing them to new experiences and new friends.

For more information about the creative programs in the Tarrant Hill Club, contact Margaret Jackson. For information concerning the School of Enrichment Programs, contact Karen McIntyre. Both can be reached at the Greater Portland YMCA 874-1111.
The jazz singer arrives
Jazz great Alfonso comes to see us at McDaniel's, Portland, August 12. Alfonso has rededicated both jazz and blues in 45 years of playing and singing, during which he has performed all over the world. Alfonso's involvement in the jazz world — clubs, players, critics, everyone — is legendary. So are his performances.

"He's a master of the jazz voice," says the critic Paul Robeson. "and learned his lessons well from the old Delta blues masters."
