Treating Portland’s heroin fix

Heroin is easy to find, but methadone treatment isn’t

By Eric Hannelius

On July 24, Debra Kruzel of Portland, 32, died of a heroin overdose. It was the third heroin-related death in Portland this year.

In Portland, there are shoots and growing groups of people using heroin, with a particularly potent batch of heroin known as China White, which is being ‘scored’ by the city’s heroin users.

And police say the number of people using heroin is growing.

"Six years ago there may have been 25 heroin addicts in all of Portland," said Sgt. Arthur Shaughnessy, head of the Portland police department’s narcotics unit. "Now we are dealing with more than 200. That’s a tremendous increase."

Shaughnessy said the highly addictive heroin has become the local drug of choice because it is more available and less expensive than other drugs, including cocaine.

And while the city’s heroin population continues to grow, treatment for addicts is scarce. Methadone detoxification, a highly successful treatment used for heroin addicts, is not available anywhere in Cumberland County. This is partly due to the fact that Maine, unlike most other states in the country, does not provide any funding for methadone treatment.

"Heroin addiction is not treated as a medical issue in Maine, it’s treated as a political and socioeconomic issue," said Dr. Richard Corbett, head of the 70-bed unit at Mid-Maine Medical Center in Waterville, the only place in Maine offering methadone detox.

Instead of offering the addict a treatment that works, we purposely deny them the treatment hoping they will go away to another state for treatment."

Recycling’s long and winding road

By Paul Karr

Regional Waste Systems (RWS), Portland’s quasi-municipal solid waste agency, put out a brochure with vivid color photographs of downtown Portland, the autumn woods, and a dump truck riding off into the sunset. The text notes the desire of RWS to "help preserve, and even enhance, our most precious resource: the pure and natural beauty of Maine." The brochure says RWS is "a major recycler" that wants people to recycle more and throw out less. Moreover, it continues, RWS has "become the best in the world, a global model of waste management efficiency."

But the brochure itself was not printed on recycled paper — it was printed on a glossy, laminated stock that cannot be recycled. And the chances are excellent that it will end up right back where it came from, at RWS headquarters. Except this time it will be incinerated, creating a spark of electricity and a speck of toxic ash that will lodge in a scrubber and eventually be dumped into an ashfill.

RWS is not in the recycling business as much as it is in the waste-to-energy business. And the company recently ended a pilot curbside recycling program in favor of "drop-off" containers to which recycling devotees haul their own recyclables.

Now Portlanders who would like to do their part to conserve natural resources by recycling are finding that the road to recycling is strewn with garbage.

Barringer: Free the tourists

The repeating campaign in the newspaper ranging reference continues to interest and absorb each other's arguments.

The Campaign for Sensible Transportation on Aug. 8 unveiled what spokesperson Richard Barringer called a "new and broad-based approach that would allow the Transportation Authority to continue its work on the issues of the day." The campaign was started by the city council and was designed to draw attention to the need for a new method of transportation for the city.

MADD money funs

The Maine chapter of MADD — Mothers Against Drunk Driving — has had a steady growth in membership, according to its president, who said it is due to the efforts of the volunteers who have worked hard to increase awareness of the issue. The organization is still in its early stages, but it is growing quickly.

Maine Festival goes on

The Aug. 10-12 event will feature a variety of activities, including a festival on the first day, a concert on the last day, and a parade on the second day. The festival will feature live music, food, and a variety of other attractions.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR SENSIBLE TRANSPORTATION ON AUG. 8 UNVEILED WHAT SPOKESPERSON RICHARD BARRINGER CALLED A "NEW AND BROAD-BASED APPROACH THAT WOULD ALLOW THE TRANSPORTATION AUTHORITY TO CONTINUE ITS WORK ON THE ISSUES OF THE DAY." THE CAMPAIGN WAS STARTED BY THE CITY COUNCIL AND WAS DESIGNED TO DRAW ATTENTION TO THE NEED FOR A NEW METHOD OF TRANSPORTATION FOR THE CITY.

Lobster madness

A lobsterman says they are having a very bad season. He says he has had problems with the lobsters in recent years, but this year has been far higher than in the past. He says the lobsters have been smaller and fewer, making it harder for the fishermen to make a living.

Gasoline cost

The cost of gasoline has increased dramatically in recent years, as public concern has grown about the environment. The government has been working hard to reduce the use of gasoline, and has made efforts to increase the use of public transportation.

New court clerk

The new court clerk, a lawyer who was appointed to the position, has been working hard to make sure that justice is served. She has been working closely with the district attorneys to ensure that the cases are handled fairly and efficiently.

Portland gets transit bucks

Portland's Regional Transportation Program will receive a $4 million federal grant with public bus companies throughout Maine and plans to buy new seventeen vehicles to serve Greater Portland.

The grant, provided by U.S. Transportation Administrator Wilbur H. Lewis, is intended to help the decline in non-motor transportation throughout the country.

The Aug. 10, the UMTA also awarded a grant of $200,000 to the Casco Bay Island Transit District to help pay for a new ferry to replace the 19-year-old vessel. The money represents 25 percent of the cost of building a replacement for the "helpful," which left, Long, Chebeague, Cushing, and Jones Chandlind Islands for 28 years.

A replacement for the "helpful" is expected to be in service in three to five years.

Road to Recycling

This fall year.

The result on January 1 Portland will begin paying an average of $18 per ton to haul recyclables in the RWS plant while other towns will have to start paying as much as $100 per ton, since it costs more to haul them farther. Bell says this will not Portland approximately $1.5 million a year. With 75 franchises and increased participation, it could meet considerably more in the future.

Rummaging for solutions

When RWS abandoned its free curbside pickup program, Waste Management of MA - which has been contracted to collect recyclables during the program - offered to continue providing curbside collection of individual households wanted to hear the bid.

Waste Management of MA offered the sum to $3.20

Greater Portland households at a cost of $2.00 per month, but fewer than 100 homes responded appropriately.

"That's about as smart a way you could ask for," says Root. The rate of a curbside program will by necessity be about the same for Portland." He said with the RWS contract with the City of Portland is exclusive and binding through the year 2000, and that contract had always unambiguously on environmental groups and individuals promoting recycling. But this spring, even as the company's curbside pilot program reached a final goal did battle with RWS over its plans to recycle a bit of downtown Portland's trash. The Junior League of Westbrook and Sebago - for $1 million in additional revenues.)

RWS represents the most expensive option of all-to dragon to the planet.

(Blackstone, an environmental and consumer advocacy group which specializes in opposition to incineration, says their mission is to prevent this plant from being built, or any other landfill in the area.

But according to some environmental groups, incineration is the most expensive option of all - to the planet.

"Incineration is a huge disservice to recycling," says Frank Doe of the Maine Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), and environmental and consumer advocacy group which specializes in opposition to incineration, "It's not a hard road to recycle.

"I think any solid waste strategy that doesn't have recycling is irresponsible," saysRoot. "It's a solid waste policy that relies solely on recycling is disintegrating." Paul Beck has been working with the Casco Bay's recycling efforts. Andy Newman contributed to this report.

Wake up and smell the garbage

Regional Waste System (RWS) has abandoned its curbside recycling program, and the future of recycling in Portland rests on whether the city council endorses a vehicle to re-establish its recyclables to one of Portland's four recycling stations. With the recent announcement of a new 10-year contract, there is no surprise that decision-makers with RWS concluded its curbside recycling program was not feasible. People in the waste-to-energy bin who view trash as just another fuel source and cars as another form of transportation. But the idea that we can afford to recycle and reduce the amount of waste we produce is perhaps the most fundamental idea of trash poisoning the planet, the truth is that we can't afford not to. Involvement in the solid-waste system rests on people who run businesses, as well as from local and state government policies. People who run businesses, on the other hand, need to think about their responsibilities as well.

More than 100 companies in the country have implemented volume-based garbage rates for their residents. Residents don't pay for volume; they pay for the size of the bags they use. And those bags are only counted when they are used, not when they are discarded. The program encourages recycling and reduces the amount of trash going into landfills. The City of Portland charges $2 for every bag of trash collected, making Portlanders waste recycling more and composting less. The city also offers a program that allows residents to pay a monthly fee to have their waste picked up. By doing so, residents can save money and reduce the amount of waste going to landfills.

The Council of Northeast Governors, which includes Maine, has announced a plan to draft a new waste management bill. The bill would require all communities in the region to implement a comprehensive waste management plan. The plan would include recycling, composting, and waste reduction goals. The council hopes to have the new bill ready for consideration in the next legislative session. The bill would be a significant step forward in improving waste management in the region. It would ensure that all communities have a consistent approach to waste management and are held accountable for their actions.

Return of the aseptic sore losers

By Donald Morrissey

This week, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health issued a notice of violation to the aseptic packaging industry. The notice is based on the discovery of a critical defect in the aseptic packaging process. The defect was found during a routine inspection of a facility that packages liquid products.

The aseptic packaging industry is a major contributor to the state's economy. The industry provides jobs for thousands of workers and is responsible for a significant portion of the state's tax revenue. The industry's success is built on the ability to package products in a manner that is both safe and efficient. The defect discovered in the aseptic packaging process threatens the safety of products that are currently being packaged. The industry is working to correct the issue and ensure that products are packaged in a safe and effective manner.

Inappropriate chamber

It seems to us that a great many people are overly concerned about the safety of our banks. Namely that of a bank teller for a pesticide residue to be found in a bottle of water. Perhaps we should be more concerned about the safety of our own water supply.

Brinowski is among towns throughout the country that have made recycling mandatory. Everyone must sort the recyclables and then place them in the appropriate bin. The town is also considering implementing a program that allows residents to exchange recyclables for money.

ERNEST POOK

by Linda Barry

REAL PUZZLE

by Dan Rabin

Legend

A legend is an explanatory list of the symbols used on a mug or chart.

Real puzzle

Using the list at the bottom of your puzzle, see if you can connect the various symbols at the top. From the clue to the beach, it's a given. Of course, none of your lines should cross.

Person of the week

Do you have vertical rhythm? Non-smoking, 5', 114 lbs., seeks good leader (or learner). Also enjoys movies, walks, nature, and exploring the possibilities. Must be financially and emotionally responsible. A sense of humor and a warm heart mandatory. "B"5077

Solution to Real Puzzle #82

Can you solve the Real Puzzle? There is a $500 gift certificate from Abela's for the first prize winner. The second prize winner will receive two free passes to the Movies on Exchange Street. Winners will receive their prizes in the mail. Drawings are done at random. Contestants are eligible to win more than one prize in a four-week span. Only one entry is allowed per person per week.

All entries for this week's puzzle must be received by 8/21. The solution to this week's puzzle will appear in the August 21 issue of Casco Bay Weekly. Send your best guess:
