An oil spill that never happened left a green stain on me.

On Tuesday, September 12, an imaginary 200,000 gallons of crude oil spilled into Casco Bay just off the Eastern Prom so that the Coast Guard could test the readiness of Portland's cleanup crews. Within an hour, local contractors were on the scene to contain the peat moss used to simulate the spill; within four hours, Governor John McKernan and a pack of journalists were on the scene to soak up the publicity.

I stayed ashore. I'd seen this act before. While growing up in Anchorage, Alaska, I watched similar demonstrations of how well-prepared the oil companies were - just in case oil ever spilled into the then-pristine waters of Prince William Sound. And, yes, the Governor of Alaska showed up for many of those demonstrations, too. But once that tanker hit Bligh Reef, it became clear that the hole in the cleanup plan was bigger than the one in the Exxon Valdez.

This time, watching from the shore, the hole in the plan was clear to me: the next environmental disaster had to happen before it could be cleaned up. That's an acceptable risk - unless the next big disaster is something like the depletion of the ozone layer, something that can't be cleaned up.

Standing along Casco Bay and thinking about Prince William Sound, I began to wonder if politicians and environmentalists would ever be able to get past rescuing the environment and start removing the forces that endanger it.

And so it was that I went looking for the Greens.
A conversation with

Chris Clark

Clark Clark never has to tell his patients to hold still. Clark, a technician in Maine Medical Center's morgue, deals with pathologists with aplomb.

How long have you been working in the morgue?

"I've been here since 1988 and I worked in a funeral home for five years prior to that."

What do you call the dead bodies?

"You could call them cadavers, but I'd just as soon call them patients."

Do you refer to them by name?

"No, each patient has an autopsy number."

Would you autopsy someone you know?

"We have a policy that if we know someone, we will not work on them. It's too close. If it's a relative or someone close to us, we have another technician do it."

How many corpses are in the hospital morgue at one time?

"An average day might have three to four. The hospital figure maybe 150 go through here a year and we autopsy roughly 10% a year."

Who gets an autopsy?

"Depends. If the family wants the autopsy. If they die in the hospital, usually the doctor will ask. If the family wants an autopsy, they perform it, if they don't, we don't."

Are there different types of autopsies?

"There are, yes. One where we already know the cause of death, and we're only confirming the doctor's diagnosis. The other kind is a forensic pathology where we're looking for the cause of death.

What might someone find difficult about doing this?

"I think one thing is, we are a lot of people who are around dead people. That's one thing. It also does get very graphic, a lot of times. I've seen people fall in watching the body being opened up for the first time and seeing the chest cavity and all the organs exposed. Also, some of the scenes here are hard to watch. It would probably be easier for someone with a medical background to do this than just someone of the street."

But you get used to it?

"You never get used to it. You think of it. I always feel they're a person even though they're dead."

What's the temperature inside the morgue?

"It's kept below 40 degrees."

Are people actually stiff?

"They're stiff. Many times you can't move them and put them around. Always like to cover genital areas, some pathologists like to cover the face. So you're not looking at a person. You're just looking in to do the job.

Tell me about some of these tools?

"There are rib cutters. This is a brain saw, and you open the skull up, and put it around. To cover the face, there's a pathologist who covers."

Is an open casket funeral possible after an autopsy?

"We do everything to disfigure the face, and everything that can be hidden by clothes, so a patient can't be shown afterward.

What's the temperature inside the morgue?

"It's kept below 40 degrees.

Are people actually stiff?

"No, it's a rib cutter. Usually within an eighteen-hour period rigor mortis will come on and it usually takes an hour coming, an hour slowing, and six hours going.

Do people ask you a lot of questions about what you do?

"Yes, it's a topic of conversation that comes up. If people ask what I do, I tell them. I don't have any comments from people when I'm at home. When people come in the hospital, I say I work in a laboratory at the hospital."

The most popular restaurant in the area, in my opinion. Excellent value, food, and service. Visited the day before yesterday... The only thing that can improve the experience is a bigger parking lot. Otherwise, a must-visit for any food lover.

I am a regular at this place and have been for years. The food is consistently good, and the service is fantastic. The atmosphere is also very nice, with a cozy and inviting ambiance. Highly recommend it to anyone who appreciates good Mexican food in a great setting.

I have been to this restaurant several times and have always been pleased with the quality of the food and the service. The dishes are well-prepared and the margaritas are delicious. The atmosphere is relaxed and welcoming, making it an ideal spot for a casual dinner or a special occasion. I highly recommend it for anyone in the area looking for a great Mexican dining experience.

I think those people who dig worms know more about how the Earth works than any of the politicians do— even the ones who call themselves environmentalists.

Earth First!

No Compromises

Rebuttal after a series of debates, for Earth First! is the only group in the United States that was founded in 1980. By then the times had changed and radical environmental groups had largely been replaced by more moderate movements. For this reason, Earth First! is a relatively new organization.

Dear Earth

The Earth First! Journal, howeve...

Earth First! employs confrontation, civil disobedience, guerrilla theater, and direct action to defend the natural environment. Earth First!

Earth First! was founded in 1980 and has drawn attention to a variety of issues. The group is known for its direct action, which often involves civil disobedience, blocking roads, and latenight demonstrations. Their tactics are often controversial, and the group has faced legal challenges.

Earth First! is a network of local groups that work together to protect the environment. The group operates on a grassroots level, with members organizing in their communities to address local environmental issues.

Earth First! is dedicated to the idea that humans must work to return the Earth to a more natural state. The group believes that industrialization and overconsumption have damaged the environment, and they work to promote a more sustainable way of living.

A Place for Country Living & Giving!

We cordially invite you to browse and enjoy our interpretation of Country. Time was when you had to collect the Country look - piece by piece. Now you can buy new "old" things. Our crafts have quality, uniqueness and affordability and for the most part we make em in the USA! We have a Maine souvenir corner, too!
