A group wanting to preserve City Hall Auditorium has faced an uphill battle in convincing the public that the hall's restoration can be improved without the massive renovation called for by a $1.5 million renovation plan. The group is led by the Second Opinion Committee "because a lot of people thought the building had already been renovated," said Martha Deprez, a member of the Committee and executive director of Greater Portland Landmarks. The committee hopes to make its expert report public this week.

Portland has landed one potential grant for the Maine National Bank building that City Manager Bill Carter has been proposing buying. The move Department of Housing and Urban Development funding moving in Portland allows from 500 to 5000 area to the Maine National Bank. The department's clause express near August 1992 says $450,000 a year to move the space, which is more than 300 area employees.

Deputy Commissioner Rudy Nolan says DHS is considering moving downtown because it would enable the agency to serve its clients in a more visible and accessible location.

Nursing home probed for neglect

A new lawsuit apparently connected another Woodford Park patient's worst trials to those endured by the state's newest in-custody nursing care center in Portland.

The investigation was opened by a complaint from Stefan Giguere of Toll Place Road in Scarborough, and the state has been seeking medical records from the nursing home and its owners. Giguere said his mother paid almost $2,000 a month to stay at Woodford Park, a 16-bed facility on Deer Isle Drive.

An employee and former employee of Woodford Park — speaking on the condition of anonymity — said patients sometimes receive inadequate care because the nursing home is short-staffed and its staff suffers from high turnover and low morale.

Lena Drago, director of Licensing and Certification for the state Department of Human Services, confirmed that the state has launched a probe of Woodford Park. Drago said the investigation "may take weeks to complete ..." noting that Drago's complaint is "serious and unusual."

Since January, the state has received six complaints about the nursing home, including two involving the possible suicide of patient Vivian Egan, according to Drago. Egan died on Aug. 17, after falling out of the window of her first-floor room. Egan attempted suicide several years ago while living in the same room, according to Portland police. Drago said an investigation of her death is under way.

Drago's agency reviews nursing homes in the state. If the agency finds evidence of abuse or neglect, its inspectors can order all state agencies to submit budgets cut by 10 percent in 2002, though her urine bag was full of blood and in plain sight.

"What makes a house a home?"

New designs focus on psychology more than fashion.

By Elizabeth Middlet

Clever - Wide Hallways may be simple. A house is where we live. Yet many of us think of home improvement as a trivial and materialistic pursuit.

That's one reason designers say, in a truce. For with conscious manipulation, we can create a dwelling place that not only suits good but helps us live well, too.

"Orientation, design is considered decor," says Suzanne Scott, University of Wisconsin professor of interior design. "But a design of a home can either help or hinder the nurturing of relationships."

A kitchen with multiple work spaces, for example, encourages family interaction. Separate spaces for spouses, on the other hand, can satisfy the need for territoriality that may be overemphasized.

Over the centuries, we developed such things as lightweight beds, that the home began to be considered a family's private domain.

The line of sight runs through the family room and into the living room. The family room to read or watch television. "This is a place to take comfort in each other's presence," says Suzanne Scott, in her "Modern America, family members are easily isolated if the family room is an addition to a sleeping unit."

In medieval times, when life was communal and highly public, many people shared bedrooms - and beds - and eating areas were large, browsing and functional. At Versailles, Louis XIV described his home as a "place to exercise one's private passions.

Once the scene, we developed such things as lightweight beds, that the home became a semi-private family domain."

Over the centuries, we developed such things as lightweight beds, that the home became a semi-private family domain.

One bedroom at home has always been more than what suits our bodies, Rybczynski says. Comfort is an "inside job." A house should be structurally sound, Rybczynski says. Comfort is an "inside job." A house should be structurally sound, Rybczynski says. "Homes that become comfortable spaces, says Sawtig St. Marie in her "Homes for Families."

Defining space

Furniture also can define private spaces. For example, if two children share a room they can mark off separate territories with desks or bookshelves. Curtains and rolls can cut down noise in any room and diminish the feeling of dormitory - research shows that when people feel crowded, they're not necessarily because they are physically cramped but because their senses are overstimulated.

Spouses can create private spaces relatively simply by using different spaces or areas - one spouse should not have their bedrooms next to their parent's, if possible.

A few changes, guided by personal insight, may be all that's needed to make your home SAFE. Homesick Syndrome guide written by Elizabeth Middlet, in her "Modern America, family members are easily isolated if the family room is an addition to a sleeping unit."

Making a house a home...

The kitchen is the heart of the home, where Meg's and O.S. might be preparing dinner.

The pantry, where you walk in is an important family communication issue," he says. "By eliminating barriers, you create a feeling of intimacy and ease of interaction."

The kitchen contains a breakfast nook, which Rybczynski calls "a tamperproof space. After giving their parents a house, children would sit at the table to play or do homework. This very, individuals perform the tasks that need to be done, yet work around each other."

After dinner, the family would move into the adjacent family room for various activities or alone. "As the family grows, says Rybczynski, "the family grows, says Rybczynski, "the family grows, says Rybczynski."

Privacy is a growing need, and Rybczynski says more and more new homes contain separate bedrooms suites for parents. "Parents want a place where they are not so easily accessible," he says.

In a family, the suites are multifaceted and thus become a kind of free area where parents can escape for brief periods. In addition to a sleeping area, the suites usually have a connecting bathroom and sometimes another room where adults can read or work or simply enjoy a view.

This teaches the family the importance lesson," says Rybczynski. "But we can have a sense of community and our own place of tranquility, too."

Not all families have the wherewithal to build on a small house from the ground up. That's where modifications can improve a family's home. Design and privacy can be preserved with subtle touches.

For example, a small table in the bedroom will keep a child's power and protect within comfortable talking range. One designer talks about a man who bought an extra large desk for his kitchen so he and his wife could stand and talk to each other at night and do the dishes and chat. And King Arthur, of course, learned years ago that a round table fosters conversation and brings every family member out of a rectangular era.

If a house has only one area to serve both family room and living room, a well-fitted, comfortable chair can make where his family members are easily isolated if the family room is an addition to a sleeping unit."

Small but roomy

Expand space with a few simple decorating guidelines

By Bettye Morey

In Donald Halpern’s family room, an antique Turkish chest serves as a charming coffee table, and a top chest of sturdy walnut his wife can use when she gets out the coloring books.

Halpern’s house is small, so she makes the most of space by using furniture that’s functional as well as decorative. In just one of the many tricks you can use to get the most out of a small amount of space, says Halpern, an interior designer for 25 years, “I don’t have to be cramped, and I don’t have to be bored.”

Co-owning a home

How two single people can buy property together

By Elizabeth McElvish

Buying a home or condo seemed like a simple deal between partners—until one of them found a job in another state and wanted out.

The couple behind couldn't afford to buy the hilltop property as a third. The partner who tried to sell his legal share found a job in another state and wanted out.

The first time housingbuying partners must decide how they wish to hold title, and what choices the remaining partner has if one of these events occurs. For example, can a survivor own the partnership property alone? If she feels like she is, can another of the owners change the mortgage?

In one example, a couple purchased a property in 1987. The agreement allowed a partner to sell his or her share to another co-tenant and protect such partner from the partner's co-tenant. In other words, if one owner defaults on a mortgage, the other partner to anticipate suchevent.

The value of co-ownership of the house to be sold is to be sold to a co-owner. One partner was required to pay his or her share of the down payment from the partnership.

Co-owners who are making special contributions toward a home also should be aware that the partner making larger payments may be subject to gift taxes. Weeks were required to sell their shares to other owners with prior knowledge of the property if the owners did not want to buy it.

Under the laws of some states, if property is owned in joint tenancy, it is not possible to sell a fraction of the property to another partner. A co-owner's share is sold to a co-owner, and both are co-owners of the property.

The partners' contributions to paying the second share or joint tenants because neither partner can be required to pay taxes on the share of the partner's share, but both partners to anticipate such event.

A co-owner who is co-owning a home with a specific person may have to agree to be bought out if the remaining partner wants out. The partners to anticipate such event.

GETTING A COPY OF YOUR CREDIT REPORT

How my dog ruined my credit

(A true story.)

By Monte Paulsen

I've never really understood the easy way of credit reporting. In fact, I never understood why, when I was in college and had no money, every credit company in the town was standing on their heads with payment of fees, when I finally had a job that paid enough to go on a diaper and change that plan. And after the credit card companies tracked me, I had the idea.

So when CIBC/CHROME SELL OTHER ELLEN LIBERT begged me to review a new book published by Fleet Financial, "Wrongful Credit Reports," I thought about my dog, Daffy, and how she learned to report the many mistakes made in on her credit file. I couldn't help but think, "Isn't it too late to fix this?"

The booklet explains that simple mistakes on credit reports are compiled, what companies compile them, where credit reporting information comes from and how people can challenge their credit reports and whether or not a consumer should be allowed to borrow money or charge a purchase.

"There's a lot of money at stake," the author of a new credit card, the price of a house, the cost of medical care," explains the 32-page Fleet booklet, authored by Ellen L. Zuckerman. "Whether it's your first, or another of many credit cards, it's important to know how to handle it."

Daffy, the dog, has been quite helpful in explaining the concept. As a result of one of those mistakes, Daffy's name has been missing from my credit report. My dog had never been a credit card holder, and it was a surprise when I finally received a letter from my current credit card company.

The letter explained that Daffy's name was being included on my credit report, along with other errors. I should explain that I signed for Daffy's name on my credit card application, and she is quite happy about it.

How do I report an error?

The booklet explains what you can do if you find an error on your credit report. It's important to remember that an error can be corrected in a timely manner, and the process can be repeated if necessary.

Why do I need to keep my credit report current?

Credit companies are required to keep your credit report current. It's important to keep a record of any changes or corrections you've made, and to check your report regularly.

Conclusion

Credit reporting is a complex process, and it's important to understand how it works. By following the procedures outlined in this booklet, you can ensure that your credit report is accurate and up-to-date.

Keyboard gadgets are the new must-haves. They are the '90s what cars were to the '50s: personal and practical. The Xerox Homefront model can well remember the late-eighties ads of the Xerox Corporation. They featured Kitchen gadgets that looked like items from a Bermuda by the Hyundai. These items garnered the ultimate combined with the ugliest and darkest-looking vegetable in the world faster than you could say Trudy Krueger.

To the traditional voice-over of an oblivious man, outdoing the rest, a new line of the Xerox brand, a hyperbolic female opponent to appear in multiple movies as she put the little bugger through the press. She smiled beauti­ly, as pieces of cars, clothing in entire object part after the shredded.

Times change. This is the lesser, gentler version, after all, so it's not that surprising the kitchen also reflects a trend. Just over the past year, the emphasis on the use of innovative and elegant gadgets has caused a new trend in the kitchen. It's that the more expensive stuff is not necessarily the most practical. Sweet.

Almost everybody loves homesick of kitchen workhorses that seemingly have everything. (Even Oprah, busy manufacturing and advertising have contributed to this.}

Unfortunately, this phenomenon has appeared. As more and more people are spending time in the kitchen, the desire to keep up with the latest gadgetry is becoming more popular. Many of these gadgets are not only fun to use but also make cooking and baking easier.

For example, the Xerox X-Pressor is a device that allows you to make a perfect omelet in just seconds. It comes with a variety of molds and is easy to clean. The Xerox X-Pressor is available at most kitchen supply stores and online.

Some of these gadgets are more expensive than others, but they all serve a purpose and can be a great addition to any kitchen. Whether you're a professional chef or just looking for a way to make your cooking experience more enjoyable, these gadgets are sure to help.

This trend also offers the opportunity to create new recipes and dishes. With the help of these gadgets, you can experiment with new ingredients and flavors to create unique and delicious meals. So, whether you're looking for a new way to prepare your favorite dish or just want to try something new, there's sure to be a kitchen gadget that's perfect for you.

A struggle for human rights

"I am an 'other.' People will say I am an 'other.'" - King Features Syndicate

In every country in the world, people are fighting for their basic rights - the right to live in peace, the right to education, the right to work, the right to health care, the right to freedom of speech, the right to vote, the right to democracy. These are fundamental human rights that are enshrined in international law.

In many countries, people are forced to fight for these rights against overwhelming odds. They may be fighting against government authorities, against corporate interests, against discrimination, against poverty, or against any number of other obstacles.

One person's fight for human rights may look different from another's, but the common thread is the determination to stand up for what is right, to demand justice, to seek equality, and to build a better world.

Citizen

As a citizen, you have a role to play in the struggle for human rights. You can help by raising awareness, supporting organizations that work for human rights, and taking action when you see injustice.

Remember, every small step you take can make a difference. Stand up against injustice, and let your voice be heard.

Thank you for being a part of the struggle for human rights.

Charles Hewitt paints images from a personal tarot deck

Charles Hewitt has some serious things to say about the human condition. With good cause. Hewitt, a 50-year-old New York City's Bowery, the homeless capital of America. Every day, evening or leaving his left, he has his now packed in some pretty meager quarters. He's an artist. He wants you to see it. He wants you to understand. Hewitt's message isn't just some simple, easy-to-understand concept. It's a complex, multilayered message. He wants you to look at it, to understand it. He wants you to feel it. He wants you to think about it. He wants you to consider it.

IN ANDREW'S WAKE...

Hurricane Andrew's devastating winds burned South Florida and the Gulf. More than 60,000 houses were destroyed and 200,000 people remain homeless and hungry. Whole communities lack food, clean water, medical care and basic shelter. Their suffering will continue for weeks as their communities struggle to restore the basic necessities of life.

With your help, the Red Cross can deliver the essential food, clothing and shelter to the victims of Hurricane Andrew and other disasters. The Association of Alternative New Yorkers joins the American Red Cross in asking you to act immediately to help the people who have nowhere else to turn.

Q I will call 1-800-842-2200 now to pledge my support for the victims of Andrew.
Q I'm sending this coupon with an emergency gift to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund in the amount of $50. $25 $50 $100 Other

"I'm a 3rd year art college student with a passion for art and design. I'm looking for a roommate who shares my love for creativity and has a positive attitude. I'm easy to get along with and am open to meeting new people. I'm currently living in a dorm with a roommate, but am looking to move into a shared apartment or a room in a house. I'm hoping to find a roommate who is respectful of my space and has similar interests. I love going to art exhibits and concerts and enjoy spending time with friends. I'm excited to meet someone who shares my passion for art and wants to make the most of their college experience. Thanks!"
