John Flood opened the Brackett Street Veterinary Clinic almost a year ago after practicing in Wells and Kennebunk. The clinic takes care of wild and domesticated animals of all kinds. On select Fridays, there is a house pet adoption day.

Do animal owners appreciate you're on the periphery?
It was obvious right away that we would hit a mark. Within the first week, we had a man with a dog and three rescued birds. I'd say half of the clientele walk in.

When did you decide you wanted to become a vet?
It was under 21, I gave up the idea of being a veterinarian, but decided to be a vet. I rented a house in South Portland. I was already in school, so the only thing I wanted to do was work. It was a wonderful experience. I was allowed to do very few things other than just do routine spays and people like that.

What's the hardest thing you've had to do?
When somebody comes in with a very bad dog that they've had forever, and you find a mass in its abdomen, and you have to do the surgery on the great vessel around the heart. It's very difficult.

Do you think the popular stereotype of veterinarians as kindly old men is a little unrealistic?
The veterinary profession is still very popular. It's still a very, very staid profession.

I enjoy it because you work with a very stoic and won't show you where it hurts and won't cry out, where a small dog will. You do. Large-breed dogs tend to be very stoic and won't show you where it hurts and won't cry out, whereas a small dog will.

Why did you come to Maine?
Twenty years ago I was in dairy practice in Vermont. I found there were only six different things you could do in dairy practice, and it got monotonous. So I decided to break out.

Since they can't talk, do you learn to read an animal in other ways?
Yes. Five years ago I was in dairy practice in Vermont. I found there were only six different things you could do in dairy practice, and it got monotonous. So I decided to break out.

What's the hardest thing you've had to do?
When somebody comes in with a very bad dog that they've had forever, and you find a mass in its abdomen, and you have to do the surgery on the great vessel around the heart. It's very difficult.

Do you do all types of surgery here?
We do everything. We recently did some surgery on the great vessel around the heart. It was a very hard case with a congenital heart defect. It took the afternoon. The hole was much wider than you'd expect, and we had to do a fair amount of cautery.

I like working with animals and in medicine. I'm not mushy about it. You can be very, very sentimental, and it might be the wrong job. There's a hard side to it.

The results are in.
Of course, hopefully, the poll hasn't exactly closed. Or exactly opened. But these seem like loose excuses for not surrounding who the fry been seen in this year's elective.
Because no matter what, everyone here in our Nov. 7. January is already feeling sick out of what appears to be tremendously painful locations in lots of candidates, campaigns campaign.

Let's meet with National Death With Dignity. The supporters of doctor-assisted suicide have spent over $1 million.
This is just to say

I have recently discovered a code of ethics for maintaining domestic harmony.

Individual cupboards, refrigerator shelves into the area, they’re quite impressive.

I remain loyal to my home and love making the perfect meal for my dear one.

You don’t have to be a slave to the kitchen; you can still make a fantastic meal, and your partner will love you for it.

If you’re feeling stuck in the kitchen, try one of these tips to get inspired.

1. Plan your meals for the week: This will help you organize your ingredients and avoid waste.
2. Use leftovers in creative ways: Turn them into new dishes or snacks.
3. Shop seasonally: This can help you save money and get the freshest ingredients.
4. Explore different cuisines: You can try out new recipes and flavors that you’ve never used before.
5. Take care of your own comfort: Make sure you take breaks and enjoy your time in the kitchen.

I wish you all the best in your cooking adventures.

Sincerely,
[Your Name]

9 AL DIAMOND

This issue marks our second exploratory probe (very bit as painful as it sounds) into the candidates and issues being voted on in the Nov. 7 election. This time we focus on our attention on UPO (Uranium-Producing Organisms) or possibly, Unqualified Plan Officials (UpO) that have landed in Portland, South Portland, Cape Elizabeth and Falmouth. The issue whose mission is to provide a cover for the ballot and help questions and local and legislative matters to be discussed. Some readers may find the issue too much for their liking. And yet, in every issue, we know more voters don't win but their ballots with us, anymore. But a little extra effort was necessary to avoid "the candidates from the Planet-One-Line-to-Complete-Arrow" or "the politicians from the Planet-Fill in right column."

TIME SHIFTERS

Pilging through Portland schools one finds a witch oas dark, when more than 70 percent of the city's voters don't bother to cast ballots for candidates for the City Council and School Committee. Sitting around the polls one is the feeling for one of these questions that's received to take all the confusion over to a better life on some distant world.

On Nov. 7, Portland voters will be asked whether the city should change the date of its municipal elections from May to November. This issue gets those who believe bigger turnouts are better for local democracy against those who argue a small number of informed voters is preferable to a large number of know-nothings.

Democrats in the nominally nonpartisan city balloting. Because over 45 percent of Portland's voters are Dems, compared to less than the donkey-party machine will be more successful in turning out its supporters for the November elections, thereby hindering the chances of Republicans running for local office.

ALDIAMON

In our extensive research, we've discovered these strange beings have come to Earth seeking our precious votes, and will stop at nothing to capture our allegiance, even if it means giving stupid answers to difficult questions. So before you engage in any close encounters with a voting machine, check our data for signs of turnouts are better for local democracy against those who argue a small number of informed voters is preferable to a large number of know-nothings.

Caught Them All

Unbeknownst to many people running for elected office in Greater Portland, a film was released last summer that has the potential to drastically change the rules of the game.

The movie, “Pokemon,” has already attracted thousands of viewers to theaters around the country. The film tells the story of a young boy named Ash, who embarks on a journey to become the greatest Pokemon master in the world.

According to sources close to the production, the film is set to premier in Maine, with many of the local candidates expected to attend the screening.

“Ash is a true hero,” said one candidate. “He never gives up, no matter how difficult the situation may seem. We can all learn a lot from his perseverance.”

The film’s success has sparked a debate among the local politicians about whether to endorse Ash or to support a rival character, Pokemon. Some candidates have even gone so far as to create their own Pokemon teams, vying for the title of greatest Pokemon master.

While the movie was originally intended for children, its themes of teamwork and determination have resonated with voters of all ages.

“Pokemon is a film that speaks to the heart of all of us,” said another candidate. “It reminds us that we can overcome any obstacle if we work together.”

However, some candidates have expressed concerns about the film’s impact on the political landscape.

“I don’t think Pokemon is a film that should be taken seriously,” said one candidate. “It’s just a kids’ movie, and we need to focus on more important issues.”

Despite the controversy, Pokemon has become a major force in the race for political office. As the election approaches, candidates are expected to make their Pokemon teams public, vying for the support of voters.

The outcome of the race remains uncertain, but one thing is for sure: the film has changed the game.

On Planet Ivan

We are not alone. This has been proven by Ivan, a being from an alien world who recently landed on Earth. Ivan has been studying our planet for years, and he has made a discovery that will change the way we look at our world.

Ivan has discovered that Earth is not the only planet in the universe. He has found evidence of other planets, some even more advanced than ours.

According to Ivan, these planets are home to other intelligent beings, some of whom are even more advanced than humans. He has also discovered that these beings have the ability to travel through space and time, and that they have been visiting Earth for centuries.

Ivan has shared his knowledge with the world, and he is now working to establish contact with these alien beings. He believes that by working together, we can solve the problems that face our planet and create a peaceful, harmonious society.

Although some people are skeptical of Ivan’s claims, others are excited about the possibility of contact with these alien beings. Only time will tell whether Ivan is right, but one thing is certain: our world will never be the same again.

I first heard about the Blair Witch legend in the 1970s, and every since then I've been fascinated by the idea of a haunted forest. The idea of a family going into the woods and never coming out again is just too much to bear. I've always been afraid of the woods, and I know that's why the movie was so effective. The Blair Witch Project is not a monument to jump scares and cheap thrills. It's a true horror film, one that will stick with you long after the credits have rolled. The movie is a study in terror, and it's a testament to the power of the unknown. The idea of a place where evil lurks around every corner, where the pull of the woods is too strong to resist, is a terrifying one. I'm not sure if I'll ever be able to watch this movie again.
