A woman gave me a small card to fill out. I did so and walked out, never thinking about the recession but didn't think twice about butter and my friend had scallops with spicy lime and vegetable senses. Finally, on my birthday, I was trying to figure out where to go. What Maine was about I owned one pair of wanny socks and two.

Good Cookin'
KATAHDIN

I moved from California to Maine in August of 1989. I had no idea what it meant to be an owl. I was one of a pair of warm socks and two. I couldn't believe how well I could get to know the town, I found a new miniature opening on my corner. When it finally did stop it still, I enjoyed the most delicious aroma would fill my senses. Finally, on my birthday, I was trying to figure out where to go. What Maine was about I owned one pair of wanny socks and two.

Many of the same folks who are questioning whether Maine's new boss, Democrat Angus King, really is the real deal. He's a leader who's always looking for a way to cut the deficit. And he's a Democrat who's ready to work with both parties to get things done.

That's not to say that campaigns are free of expenses. The state law requires legislative candidates to keep records of their spending, too, even though it may not always be accurate.

The committee's decision to ban the sale of liquor within city limits has been a success. The merrymakers didn't discriminate. They took signs that they wouldn't mind paying for beer.

On the agenda for the meeting of the Portland Board of Education is a decision on whether to continue a program that provides free meals to students.

I was about to do my homework, but then I read about the most expensive generation of wanny socks.

The leaflets violate the state law because they are spreading false information about a candidate and their campaign.

For our part, we have always been able to handle it. We will do so. But the question is how.

The board's decision to ban the sale of liquor within city limits has been a success. The merrymakers didn't discriminate. They took signs that they wouldn't mind paying for beer.

Looking for a few good Republicans

Portland hasn't sent a Republican legislator to Augusta in 12 years, but the times might be changing as pro-choice, pro-gay rights moderates are back in control of the city GOP committee. Now all they have to do is recruit some candidates.

By Bob Young

Campaigns are, Portland politicians will tell you, another entirely Democratic delegation to the state Legislature on Nov. 3. And in keeping with the recent trend, the last GOP hasn't put up much of a fight. Of the 15 Democratic candidates running unopposed, a couple of others face only token opposition. One reason for the DP's domination is obvious—Democrats outnumber Republicans roughly three-to-two in Portland's registered voters.

But the numbers don't tell the whole story, according to Republican leaders, who note that one-third of the city's voters are not enrolled in a party and could be swayed to vote for candidates.

"They've been sitting on the fence for years because the city and the suburbs are a lot more liberal than the state and nation at large," said Ellie Bickmore, chairwoman of Portland's Republican City Committee.

Fear of failure

Hancock Payne served one term from 1989 to 1991 (she didn't seek re-election). Payne said the secret to her success was thorough research. She was confident enough in her neighborhoods to run on a no-party campaign, featuring an ad about her interviewing neighbors. The ad was successful and in the future, several more residents were interviewed. And she ran against "an embarrassment," Ed Godfrey, who received no votes.

Hancock, Maine, which has a strong community of its own, is not afraid to take risks. Hancock's primary goal is to elect a new mayor and to have a mayor who runs unopposed, while a couple of others face only token opposition.

But Hancock, Maine, is not afraid to take risks.

McKeen said Maine could generate $200 million in new revenue by lobbying the state to invest in more investments and create more jobs. He believes the state could also benefit from the state's tourism industry by promoting more agricultural and seafood products, which he says are some of the state's most valuable resources.

McKeen also advocates major reform of the state's education system, which he says is fragmented and inefficient. He wants to streamline state government and reduce the number of state agencies and departments.

McKeen is a member of the Democratic Party and serves on the Labor Committee and the Joint Select Committee on Corrections and Correctional Facilities.

McKeen is married and has one daughter.

Put up or shut up

Everybody's been piling on "change" this election season. At Casino Bay Weekly, our coverage has been no different. For years, we've strived to provide you with a free, fair, and non-partisan source of news and information. We believe in the power of journalism to advance understanding, compassion, justice — and commentary. But we also know that in order to continue serving you, we must stay true to our principles.

As voters we are faced with abundant candidates and ballot questions through which we can choose to make an impact on our community, our state, and our country through the ballot box. It's time for change-hungry voters to put up or shut up. We at Casino Bay Weekly endorse the following candidates and issues:

For U.S. Congress: Tom Andrews

In his agenda for change, Tom Andrews has made health care reform and the environment key priorities. As the top environmental protection agency in the country, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is responsible for ensuring our nation's air, water, and land are protected from pollution and other harm. Andrews supports the EPA's mission and has been a vocal advocate for the agency's budget.

For Maine Senate:

1. Paul McLean: A self-described "environmental activist," McLean has been a leader in the fight for clean air and water. He has been a key proponent of the Clean Energy Initiative, which seeks to reduce our state's dependence on fossil fuels and promote renewable energy sources.

2. Cindy Esty: Esty is a passionate advocate for the environment and social programs. She stresses that answers for more thoughtful ones. She expresses unbending support for education, the environment and social programs.

For Maine House:

1. Merle Nelson: Nelson is a strong advocate for the environment and has been a vocal critic of the Bush administration's efforts to deregulate and weaken environmental protections.

2. Merle Nelson: Nelson is a strong advocate for the environment and has been a vocal critic of the Bush administration's efforts to deregulate and weaken environmental protections.

Legal reasons to vote no

By Octavio E. Delgado

At a recent debate at Portland City Hall, candidates in the city's high-rate ordinance, James Duran and Jerry Young — who are opposed to the ordinance — made compelling arguments for why the ordinance should not be passed. Their arguments require a closer look.

First, Duran and Young argue that the ordinance is unconstitutional. They contend that the ordinance should not be passed because it is not consistent with the state and local laws. Unwarranted discriminations in the environmental president, vigorously preventing the Bush/Quayle approach to defending the environment against abuse.

Second, Duran and Young argue that the ordinance is too broad. They contend that the ordinance should not be passed because it would allow the city to discriminate against any group of people to give up behavioral choices in order to be free from discrimination.

Finally, Duran and Young argue that the ordinance is too vague. They contend that the ordinance should not be passed because it would make it too difficult for the city to determine what is discriminatory and what is not.

In conclusion, we believe that the ordinance is necessary to protect the environment and the rights of all citizens. We urge you to vote no on this proposal.

James Williams provides keys to jazz

By Jim Balloul

Scott Reeves, the director of jazz studies at USM, has made a deft decision in hiring pianist James Williams to work with his students this week. Williams is familiar with the process, having been a faculty member at Berklee in Boston and the University of Hartford. He also worked with Art Blakey for four years, which probably makes just being held in higher esteem. After all, Blakey is only to jazz academics what recorded jazz itself.

Putting together a jazz history involves treading in central figures — composers or improvisors who have kicked the music forward. Almost the opposite of this, the best known jazz musicians have been, for the most part, catalysts of change. Louis Armstrong, Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk, John Coltrane — the list is so long for far too many people to mention here. But those who have the discipline to sit down and study jazz, who have made jazz music a part of their lives and to experience the music in the context of its time, are the ones who have come to represent the vocabulary of the art form.

Some of the people whose work seems to have a special rhythm often work well together. Historic relationships often provide stability. A good rhythm section in a jazz band is often the same for a lifetime. A current relationship often seems to have a same-day, same-address philosophy in common. Many jazz musicians who have studied and developed the vocabulary of the art form are composers or improvisors who have stayed together through time. The music is the same for each of them, and the performers change, and the music changes, but the vocabulary doesn't change.

Others have artfully prepared in the musical establishment's halls, where such musical periods are not. They aref, if inadvertently, not only critical notes for defining the sound illusion of the music. As the Central Conservatory Cellist tells it.

Politics As Usual Cannot Continue

On November 3rd, South Portland voters have an opportunity to elect a candidate -
Who has creative solutions to the needs for jobs and economic development;
Who is committed to investing in our future by providing our children with the best education possible;
Who believes in protecting South Portland's precious conditions.
Who will fight for a woman's right to choose;
And who understands that affordable health care should be a right, not a privilege.
That person is Lois Galgay Reckitt, independent candidate for the Maine State Legislature - District 22.
Because politics as usual cannot continue.

State government's challenge in the 90's will be to deliver high quality services with less. More spending is not the answer. We must develop customer-oriented government, which is less costly, less bureaucratic and more imaginative in delivering essential local and state services. The fewer the dollars, the greater the challenge.

We’re not a backward country.

Yet.

Our fundamental right to privacy is in jeopardy. A movement exists in this country, made up of people who would like to strip you of your rights. They are gathering power and influence—which makes your vote very important. You needn’t be pro-abortion to acknowledge that reproductive choices are personal and private—not political.

Men and women who understand the magnitude of what is at stake must take action. If we don’t, we will find ourselves at the mercy of a political body, for whom severing the right to privacy from the constitution is only the beginning.

Don’t let apathy keep you from voting on November 3rd. The alternative to pro-choice is no choice.
