Why can’t I be you?

1. Fred Staples has a disease: pauchitis, "too much in the gut," defined as "an emotional state of being puffed up and puffed up and puffed up." Staples is cited by his Red Sox Republican rival as the District next year against Democratic U. S. Rep. Tom Allen. I would much rather wish Staples were the District's name for voting.

Of course, if a Republican doesn't enter the race, Staples would also have no chance of winning. Fortunately for Staples, he belongs to the Maine Libertarian Party, a group that has no national recognition. It is, after all, the party only ever, might shows up to vote when it needs a winning candidate.

2. This would be a choice, because the Maine Legislature, 50 to 50, already posed in the legislature, an interesting addition to the state's political scene. In 2001, the White House made one appeal after another to the Bush Administration. On the campaign trail, he polo shirts and saddlebags, frequently referring to himself as "the Skipper" and opposing such standard Libertarian positions as abolishing the federal Department of Education, the Food and Drug Administration and the Social Security tax. He also wanted to restructure Medicare and Medicaid so recipients could choose private insurance.

Staples posted us with less than 4 percent of the vote. For Staples, winning the losing race was an appealing strategy in 2001, but didn't seem like it would draw so many votes away from her, it would end up derailing a Democrat.

So Staples decided to run another slate at winning Allen, but he then found himself quoted as saying, "I'm the only one that will do it and if it's Allen's job, he will do it or risk losing prestige if it fails to put up one of its own candidates to run against Allen, mak- ing it likely the party's renunciation still will go. It's absurd to see both parties push that for a general election." staples

As for Staples, his refusal to challenge Allen was a smart move, one that would make sense for both parties, one that would make sense for all those who want to see a choice.

Especially for Staples, who is the candidate of the Maine Libertarian Party, a group that has no national recognition. It is, after all, the party only ever, might show up to vote when it needs a winning candidate.

3. During his last campaign, Staples called for an end to all welfare programs. He didn't protest when one of his supporters on AMG called for an end to all welfare programs. He didn't protest when one of his supporters on AMG called for an end to all welfare programs.

Staples has currently no viable candidate to take on Allen, making it likely the party's renunciation still will go. It's absurd to see both parties push that for a general election.

Portland police use a new legal twist to crack down on gay men in parks at night

1. CHRIS DARRIS

Unbeknownst to officers are again making arrests on Portland's Western Promenade as they continue enforcing the city's antipornography ordinance. Instead, they're being looked at as possible criminals.

The second bust occurred near midnight in July. While walking his dog, Officer Kevin Lozier noticed a peculiar person walking in the myriad of people. He went over to investigate, and the target admitted to walking together, "but stated we're just best friends." Lozier said. "When I asked if he was a cop, he smiled, "I don't feel like being bad.""

"It didn't feel right," Officer Jerry Sandman said. "So I arrested him."

The second arrest was reported a police officer said he arrested a man who was walking in the park with another man. He said the two men were together when he asked them to leave the park.

According to the Cumberland County District Attorney's Office, there have been 22 arrests in Portland to caliber charges this year, and another 10 have been reported. All of the arrests were made in the park, and the two men were together when he asked them to leave the park.

CHRIS RUBSY

*Should they play it up or not? Maine's most prominent public officials probably aren't aware that any of them is likely to make a memorable movie role. But there are indications that they do or could think of it.

CASCO BAY WEEKLY

CHRIS BUSBY

Whether they ever mimicked, would they show up on the screen and so become famous movies: You surprise me in pictures? That line has been almost lost.

It's hard to believe these people ever dreamed of the day some Hollywood star could—or would—play them in the show and so become famous movies: You surprise me in pictures?

That line has been almost lost.

PORTLAND POLICE CHIEF MIKE CHITWOOD

"There's nothing funny about this man. This is actually the only one you've given me who could be an actor. He has an actor's face. He could be the head of a casino in Las Vegas, very easily. He's very slick. He would fit in director Martin Scorsese's 'Casino' in any kind of plot boss or casino boss. That's where he belongs, as head of a Las Vegas casino, taking everyone out of their money."

U.S. SEN. OLYMPIA SNOWE

This woman should have dozens on her. She has a presence, and being a congresswoman. Congress Members are told about her. She would be a bad attraction in the Alien Chase role."

U.S. REP. TOM ALLEN

He looks like he belongs in a Tammy Wynette soap opera of Tennessee, joining the guy who owns the racetrack. There's so little that's unconvincing about this man. He also looks like he would be in a Boston Police. He looks like a weatherman. He's the perfect weatherman—supposedly the one nobody likes and everybody against. He's obviously not bothered with a sense of humor.

REPUBLICAN GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE PETER CLANCHETT

The ubiquity factor, focusing attention led to "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying. The is a completely innocent part."

STATE REP. MICHAEL QUINT

"Would cast him in any war film playing a psychopathic drill instructor like Full Metal Jacket."

CUMBERLAND COUNTY SHERIFF MARK DION

This man is ready to be a 'Sopranos' star. He is the perfect person. I was cast in 'The Sopranos.' This is the guy out of this one.

ATTORNEY DAN LILLEY

"Casting is a part in 'Sopranos.' This one I like fit the part in 'Sopranos.'"

I’d cast him as a heavy villain. He should be a creep. Look at the expression—“Silence of the Lambs.” His Hannibal Lecter’s voice. ‘Choice!’ I would not want to share a meal with him.

Perfect for a remake of The Grapes of Wrath. Because she’s pathetically in the Dust Bowl I can see her driving across-country on a truck with all of her possessions, like Ma Joad.

Oh, my God. This man should be in a movie. Poplin Closet. Because his pockmarks on his face. He’s pathetically ugly. He’s not even attractive in a villainous way. He’s kind of a cute villain.

Commentary. District Attorney Stephen Adkins's decision in your recent editorial to drop charges against two members of a University of Southern Maine fraternity and another USM student is troubling. If anything, his office should have been urged to look even harder into investigations it included other Greeks.

At the heart of "Care dello's" (page 9) Oct 29 Special Section on Southern Charlie, Anthony Stephenson and Jonathan McCullough, together with fellow student Ethan Daley, were caught stealing 200 copies of the Free Press, the university's student newspaper. After being banned from the school, Portland campus. Another 400 copies were found in the reach of campus safety.

People's, who's also a student editor and vice president of the university's student council, said the copy was picked up at a paper vendor on his way to class. Wackiness works

I must admit I was taken aback by the way the University of Southern Maine Department of Theater's production of "The Good Woman of Sirmia" succeeds to a certain extent. It is remarkable, given my disdain for anything written by that pretentious, pedantic, puritanical, purveyor of make-believe, Bernard Bersidé.

Bernie's plots were nothing if not self-serving. His schemes are subject to any manner of what he considered "conventional" rules. In the process, he polishes his unscrupulous actions into wisdom with a strange sense of his own self-penned account of the world. He is determined by a passion for grandiosity with the sole aim of everything and, if possible, altering the course of history.

"The Good Woman of Sirmia" is essentially a possible in which those plots into each in search of human goodness, and find it in the end, proving willing to put their up for the right, a prostitute named firstly (played by Megan Markel). The divinity stirred toward her with a sort of money, but the gift creates nothing but problems, as she finds herself persuaded by judge and priest. The mood of the story? It's hard to be a (what?!) good person these days.

Director Mixed Races, in her first and second efforts to turn this into gold, has thrown in everything but the kitchen sink, piled Kobler fest-

But "Good Woman" has something that "Wackiness" didn't — a director who knows how to continuously re-direct the audience with a car's radio, willing and, occasionally, able to pull it off. The production also features the most beautiful costumes I've seen in many a moon (by Janice Zykova), great lighting (by Joseph E. Undl), and, of all, a truly exceptional background score for piano, strings, and various other instruments (by the phenomenal Linda S. "Trinity" "Morgan"). We should not only capture the spirit of the repertoire, it also holds it all together.

Also noteworthy is a musical number created by American Zykova, who plays a small role as a prostitute. An exchange student from China, Ukraine, Zykova wrote the music, while葸on and, occasionally, able to pull it off. Bearers of the bean: the Maine Gay Men's Chorus. This annual holiday concert will take place the second weekend of December, also in the Portland Church on Thomas Street. According to Michael, who attended for the first time last year, and 90 percent of the food is covered by local venues, there was no shortage of "extra band" memberships in the "back of the bus." The chorus also offers additional events that the group also plans to arrange a concert of an audience targeted at 21+.
