Richardson: Use turnpike dollars for local roads

Democratic state Representative Fred Richardson of Portland is proposing to use turnpike dollars to build roads. But the Maine Turnpike Authority quickly nixed the plan.

Richardson's proposal would use funds raised for the expansion of the Maine Turnpike by tolling long local roads. In the wake of the Nov. 4 defeat of the widening referendum, Richardson said the $50 million that would have been spent next year for widening should be used instead as an emergency road fund. Richardson proposed giving towns and the city of Portland up to $5 million to build roads that would be subject to a 10-cent toll.

A benefit of this proposal would be to "force people whose cars were enhanced March 17 to go out of state. Up to 10 additional weeks of benefits are available to jobless Mainers, and state officials have estimated that about 1,000,000 individuals are eligible. Only 5,000 to 10,000 are expected to apply, however.

Over 200 people gathered at the event.

Homeless man booked in juice bar

Two homeless men set up an unattended juice bar near the crowded streets of the Maine State House, offering free juice and other beverages to passersby. The two men, who had been relying on handouts and panhandling to make ends meet, decided to start the juice bar to provide a welcome respite for the public.

The juice bar was set up in a small, makeshift juice cart near the State House, with two men taking turns to run it. They offered a variety of juices, including apple, orange, and carrot, and had a sign that read, "Free juice for all." Passersby were invited to help themselves to the juice, which was kept cold in insulated bags.

The two men, who had been living on the streets for years, said they had noticed the need for a place to rest and recharge during the busy days in the State House area.

"People are always running around, no time to stop and grab something to drink," said one of the men. "We thought it would be a good idea to offer something for free to anyone who needs it."

MT BODACIOUS

Ski Mount Bodacious
Northeastern New England's most very excellent ski area

Here's the deal. You're getting off the gondola at Sugarloaf after a near-perfect run down Narrow Gauge. You're full of confidence and vigor and you say to yourself, "Hey! Wouldn't it be, like, most excellent if I could just barrel over the headwall at Tuckerman's right now?"

Then you realize, well, yes, you can't do that because Tuckerman's Ravine is, like, 70 miles away. It's, like, in New Hampshire. Which is totally unfamiliar, given your keen state of mind just now. Geography, you decide, can really bite.

Well, we at Casco Bay Weekly agree. And we're set about to solve that chronic and often vexing inconvenience. The result? Welcome to wonderful Mount Bodacious, home to the most very excellent trails in the entire area.

We've scoured Maine and the Mount Washington Valley from top to bottom, acquiring the best runs in the land. Although our personal preference is for narrow, crooked and ungroomed trails, creating a most very balanced ski area as well. We've got chutes, glades, cornices, bumps, slalom courses, tight skiing and even bread, easy cruising runs when you need to work the knots out of your thighs. And did we mention Alberta's at-the-summit lodge and three Dollar Dyers at the base?

Mount Bodacious has only 10 trails, but don't worry about crowding. First of all, we have high-speed detachable quad chairlifts that first hit the market. For those susceptible to queasiness, we've also revised the defiant Mt. Cranmore Skiable, arguably the friendliest ski lift in the world's Second of all, skiing is by reservation only and limited to people we like. Most definitely, we don't like those people from Massachusetts who wear ski suits the color of urine after Massachusetts who wear ski suits the color of urine after Massachusetts who wear ski suits the color of urine after...

Come to think of it, it's probably best that this ski area doesn't really exist, because IF it did, we would charge you a lot of money to ski here. That may seem a little mercenary and unbecoming, particularly for an alternative newspaper with progressive values. But you want to know what's even more unbecoming? You would pay whatever we asked.

#1 Left Gully Tuckerman's Ravine

Tuckerman's Ravine is the setting, the spiritual wellspring of all extreme skiing in New England. Located on the southeast side of Mount Washington, the ravine is also where a right of passage takes place every spring among the talented and the faithful. Hitchhikers take up the near-vertical slopes from within the deep Bowl, start their skin, then plummet toward the bare summit. A ride up the line, the final您 up on a summit.

Among the many traits down the bowl, that Gully is one of the most challenging. Particularly when the winds and snow have shaped a near-vertical face of snow. Skiers fly over the lip, then take advantage of the occasional free fall into the mass of a consuming gull. And that's just the easy part. Once you start make contact with the snow, it's a tight turn around control without leaving parts of your summery or the flanking trees. The entire effect of a hanging down the garbage and a scattering of bushes, a feeling checked by extreme inches every where.

But Gully is more shielded from

The purpose of these people is to cheer wildly at each good mauling at the Colosseum, the spiritual wellspring of all extreme skiing. Which is why you see crowds of people at the Colosseum, where a right of passage takes place every spring among the talented and the faithful. Hitchhikers take up the near-vertical slopes from within the deep Bowl, start their skin, then plummet toward the bare summit. A ride up the line, the final high point on a summit.

Sunday River expands again with "magic formula" Aurora Peak meets skiers' expectations

by Peggy Carte

Leen Otten, the general manager of Sunday River Ski Resort, is touting a new expansion plan that he says will make the mountain "a magic formula," providing a whirlwind of new trails and features. The plan, which includes an additional $3.5 million in development, is designed to attract more visitors and increase the resort's appeal to advanced skiers. Some of the highlights of the new plan include: a new 1000-foot lift, a new trail network, and improved amenities.

Aurora Peak, one of the most popular areas of the resort, will benefit from the new improvements. The peak will receive a major overhaul, including the addition of a new lift that will provide faster, quieter access to the slopes. This will allow skiers to spend more time on the mountain and less time waiting in line. Additionally, the new lifts will be designed to be more environmentally friendly, reducing the resort's carbon footprint.

In addition to the new lift, the resort will also be expanding its trail network. The new trails will be designed to appeal to advanced skiers and will include a mix of groomed and ungroomed terrain. The trails will be marked with a variety of difficulty ratings, allowing visitors to choose the level of challenge they desire.

The new improvements will also include a variety of new amenities. A new lodge will be constructed, providing visitors with a comfortable place to relax and enjoy the scenery. The lodge will feature a bar, a restaurant, and a variety of other facilities.

The new expansion plan is part of a larger vision for the resort, which is to make Sunday River Ski Resort a destination for advanced skiers. The resort has already made significant investments in improving its facilities and enhancing the visitor experience, and this new plan is a continuation of that vision.

Although the new improvements are expected to be completed by the 1991-92 ski season, visitors can already expect to see the first signs of the new plan. The resort has already begun construction on the new lift and is expected to open it for the upcoming season.

In conclusion, the new expansion plan at Sunday River Ski Resort is a major step forward for the resort. The improvements will provide visitors with faster, quieter access to the slopes, and a new trail network that will appeal to advanced skiers. The new lodge will also provide a comfortable place to relax and enjoy the scenery. Visitors can expect to see the first signs of the new plan this season, and the full benefits of the new improvements will be available for the 1991-92 ski season.

Leaving the south end of downtown Portland, a block of iron, metal, and marble, the firm, solid block of a building, begins. A glass door swings open, revealing the inside. Inside, the walls are wooden, and the floors are covered in carpet. A receptionist sits at a desk, and a sign above the desk reads, "American Telemark Organization." The sign is written in capital letters, and the word "Organization" is written in a smaller font. The receptionist is a woman, and she is talking to a visitor, who is a man. The man is holding a jacket, and the woman is giving him a key card. The man is wearing a suit, and the woman is wearing a business dress.

I'm looking for a place to ski, the man says. The woman, looking around the room, says, "Sure, we have a great place here. It's called Timberline." The man, smiling, says, "That sounds great. Do you have any lessons?" The woman, smiling back, says, "Yes, we do. We have morning lessons and evening lessons." The man, nodding, says, "Perfect. I'll take a morning lesson." The woman, writing something down, says, "Great. Your lesson is at 9:00." The man, smiling, says, "Thank you." The woman, smiling back, says, "Anytime." The man, leaving the room, says, "Goodbye." The woman, waving, says, "Goodbye." The man, walking out the door, says, "Goodbye." The woman, waving, says, "Goodbye." The man, walking down the street, says, "Goodbye." The woman, waving, says, "Goodbye." The man, getting into his car, says, "Goodbye." The woman, waving, says, "Goodbye." The man, driving away, says, "Goodbye." The woman, waving, says, "Goodbye."

Small is beautiful

Small press magazines, it has been argued, are the heartbeat of poetry. They keep poetry of the people, by the people, and for the people, alive and well. Your magazine, which you have read in this Kingdom Empire, is well on the way to being a small press press magazine.

We just happen to have a dozen quality poetry magazines here in Maine. Here's a sample of two that are published annually:

- The Black Fly Review (122), University of Maine at Fort Kent

Though its name might put you off a minute, the Black Fly is not an insect. The poems contained within its pages are surprisingly fresh, frank and warranted. Listen to Nancy Darla describing new: 'These Trees Are Like Bees.'

At dawn, snow flashing from their needles, they clink that sharp foot into the world.

- 'Can't you see Nancy Taylor writing about 'The Year Men Loved Me'

They revered songs of heartbreak in my cultured heart...

My inner heart

Their education

Analytically my other blues, intervened my sugar forget.

This is a serious journal of poetry that will probably only impress. Feel it.

W. Chalmers (97), Northern Lights Press

Chalmers began our classical themes and notions with small press support. His poems, however, are not to be missed. His work will attract many.

One more poem by W. Chalmers:

Zen and the gentle art of snowshoeing

What could be more peaceful than sauntering through the white woods on snowshoes, gazing at the few struggling bare leafing along the white surface of the snow. Or being able to simply take a walk and gather your thoughts?

There are several kinds of snowshoes from which to choose:

Old-fashioned "basket"-type snowshoes are long and wort-shaped, older wooden models were quite heavy, with thick, long tails, but the modern-day incarnations are lighter, less cumbersome, and tell-least—for bulky items. Floatable snowshoes will fly you to St. Joe, Bear, etc. you already own bindings—but who cares?

Choose a pair of snowshoes that are made of foam, are divisible, and are lightweight. They're quicker and more maneuverable than snowshoes, and much more fun to use. I've climbed through every at-easy-sorry without a hitch in three years. Three minutes down will pull you 808 to Bear's, plus $20 for synthetic bindings.

Keep your snowshoes in a basket to keep them from the snow. They're quicker and more maneuverable than snowshoes, and much more fun to use. I've climbed through every at-easy-sorry without a hitch in three years. Three minutes down will pull you 808 to Bear's, plus $20 for synthetic bindings.

A winter's day spent on snowshoes is the perfect time to pursue your favorite hobbies. You can even use them for winter carnival racing. But be aware that snowshoes are not as fast as snowshoes, and they're not as comfortable as snowshoes. Wear any pair of snowshoes.

No special boots are needed for snowshoes. Wear any pair of snowshoes. But you will need a few bucks and—even more important—a willingness to slow down and enjoy what's out there.

If you already own snowshoes, there are a variety of grades, views, and wildlife habitats. As you walk, you might contemplate the fiddling, white tails, doleful animal loins, or silently effective subliminal binding on your snowshoes.

Don't forget to listen to your own breathing.
Real shopping for real people

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus but he'd take care of every kid this holiday even Tiny Tim. If you don't have the faith to believe then keep reading.

This holiday time of year, kids really should make as many gifts as possible. They're less expensive, more meaningful, and ultimately more appreciated by recipients.

Initially kids run out of free time or patience, or get small chores that seem like they'll never stop. Whenever do they get the idea of spending every available minute of their savings and checking date sets are $1 each. Hunting, the state of kids today.

Anyway, I see that at some point the average kid has the holiday shop until they drop syndrome. When this condition sets in, there are basically two options: First be the high pressure, non-stop junk mail order type. But I'm sure your kids will appreciate that this holiday season is going to be different. And second is to simply not buy them anything. As they grow older, a few kids run out of steam and seek out a new hobby. I prefer to buy them something that will help them create a new interest.

For example, some of the following: holiday craft shows, church fairs, high school programs, or visiting a local shop. To me, the holidays are a time when kids need to reflect on what they truly want and what they are capable of creating. Ultimately, kids run out of steam and seek out a new hobby.
