Rethinking Maine's incest laws

Should it ever be too late to try accused molesters?

By Andy Newman

Charles said his father sexually molested him for years before he turned 17. But Charles remained silent for one thing, the general public's attention span doesn't last that long. And no matter how many television cameras and microphones there are in the world, they're usually guarded by jealous people, fame hogs from hell with perfect teeth and excellent references. Just how will innocent people be protected from sexual abuse if the statute of limitations, which enforces people accused of crimes their constitutional rights to a speedy trial and to prepare a good defense. They tampering with the statute of limitations require criminal charges to be filed within six years after a crime is allegedly committed. The events are called "open nights." Anyone can get on the stage with a microphone and play. Oh, yes. There's one more thing required of you. You have to get up and do it. It's never as easy as it looks, and it doesn't always look that easy. In practice, it can be downright daunting - even a little frightening.

But members of Maine's legal community oppose repealing, with the statute of limitations, which enforces people accused of crimes their constitutional rights to a speedy trial and to prepare a good defense. They say people falsely accused of sexual offenses would be able to bring charges. They say people falsely accused of sexual offenses would be able to bring charges.

Proponents of the bill say the law should change. "Hmm. Let me think about that for a while." said Lina Dunning of Look Up, an Augusta-based organization that provides support and services to survivors of incest and child sexual abuse.

Said Stephen Schwartz, who chairs a legislative committee of the Maine Bar Association: "I absolutely believe that innocent people could be convicted."
To those who believe radio is the best way to keep up on the world, we say: hear here.

Residents fight ash-dump sites...

The Maine Waste Management Agency's announce- ment on April 13 that areas in Cumberland and Androscoggin counties had been chosen as possible sites for the special ash-disposal facility has drawn opposition from local residents.

The southern site will handle waste ash from the Maine Energy Recovery Co., which operates ash-dump facilities as well as steamwater storage, at the former plant site in Winslow and adjacent properties. The agency plans to put the money needed to develop and northern sites by March of 1991.

More than 200 residents gathered at Bunker Hill on April 14 to protest the agency's selection process. Bunker Hill is less than two miles from the southern site, which was chosen without an extensive inspection from the Maine Waste Management Agency.

Rumors of the site's selection have been circulating for several weeks.

What is Tuckerman's Outfitters?

56 years ago Tuckerman's was founded as Carroll Road Ski Shop and is the oldest continuously operated ski shop in the country. As of January 31, the name was changed to Tuckerman's Outfitters as a nod to Tuckerman Ravine, the legendary Mt. Washington ski area located near the first Carroll Road Store.

RETHINKING INCEST LAW

Suey in Portland who said her father first forced her to perform oral sex when she was 10. The girl said she represented the memories of being incested until she reached her 20s. "I think I was on the cusp of adulthood," said Suey. "I felt like an ordinary girl from a normal family."

A 16-year-old girl in reception at the beginning of the evening who was also a teenager when her father first compelled her to perform oral sex said she was "very lucky." "I think I was very lucky," she said. "I think I was very lucky because I was very lucky because I was able to do something useful."

"The memories were so strong," she said. "I feel I was a woman." This showed her feelings of losing control of her body."

Another Portland girl, said she was 21 when her father first forced her to perform oral sex. "It was terrible," she said. "I feel like I've had this disease ever since.

...And it was very difficult for her to describe the feelings she had while she was being forced to perform oral sex."

OPEN MIC NITE

Sidney Gottlieb

Saturday night open mic at Raoul's. Band's regulars are those who come every week to play. But at the open mic, there's no such thing as a regular. Anyone can come, play, and go. The only requirement is that you have something to say, something to sing, something to play.

Most open mic nights are run by the owner of the club, who is usually a musician themselves. Raoul's open mic is run by Tony Turner, who has been a musician for over 30 years. He first started playing at Raoul's in the early 80s, and has been a regular ever since.

Tony Turner: "I started playing at Raoul's because I loved the atmosphere. It's a place where people can come and just be themselves. It's a place where you can try new things, and not worry about the audience's reaction. It's a place where you can learn from other musicians, and grow as a musician."

The open mic at Raoul's is a great place to play for local musicians. It's a place where they can get feedback, and improve their craft. It's a place where they can experiment with new ideas, and try new things.

Tony Turner: "The open mic is a great place to find new talent. It's a place where musicians can hear each other, and get inspired. It's a place where they can meet other musicians, and build a network."

Monumental wastefulness

The NIMBY syndrome — for Not In My Back Yard — has once again reared its ugly head in towns across Maine. In southeastern York County, citizens from three towns have formed a citizens' group called "DUMP" — Don't Undermine Maine's People — to fight against the Maine Waste Management Authority's plan to locate a special-waste dump in either Arundel, Buxton or Kittery. In central Maine, the state's Low-Level Radioactive Waste Authority is battling in court to pursue a nuclear waste disposal site. And up in Aroostook, citizens are banding together with their congressional delegation and U.S. senators to fight the Air Force's plan to close Loring Air Force Base.

What hypocrisy! It is hypocrisy for people who buy food and home products packaged in toxic plastics to insist that their backyards are too clean for a toxic landfill. It is hypocrisy for those who don't think twice about the enormous amount of electricity they use to insist that their towns are too small for a toxic landfill. It is hypocrisy for those who won't even vote to tell their congressman and our special-waste dump in either Arundel, Buxton or Kittery.

It is misleading to say that these people are merely concerned about the health of their children or the environment. It is misleading to say that their concern is primarily for the future health of their community. It is misleading to say that their concern is primarily for the future health of the planet.

The real reason for their concern is the money to be made from selling waste to their towns. The real reason for their concern is the money to be made from selling waste to their states. The real reason for their concern is the money to be made from selling waste to their countries.

It is hypocrisy for those who don't think twice about the enormous amount of electricity they use to insist that their towns are too small for a toxic landfill. It is hypocrisy for those who won't even vote to tell their congressman and our special-waste dump in either Arundel, Buxton or Kittery.

It is foolish to say that the only solution is to build huge toxic and nuclear waste dumps. Let's build them once and for all. Let's build them anywhere. Let's build them here. Let's build them in Maine. Let's build them in the United States. Let's build them in the world.

FUTURE EARTH

Early days 1970s served just a few days ago and oh, are we glad you missed those days with a near-sure certainty. This backwoods approach is both the future and the present.

In those days, you, as a kid, used to become more knowledgeable about your Earth and ways to save it; and at least some elements hour measures to create the peaceful and fresh reaction of those days. For others, you can learn more about an organization called Future Earth, Inc. This backwoods approach, true to its initial, involved Parkinson and other开发者 consider Bill Patrick, visited Portland to discuss their non-profit company and when it’s headed.

FUTURE EARTH needs to take the pause that kids need to be brought in and taught in dealing with environmental challenges. Starting with "Paris" can help in informing a new generation. A lot of "children" are there waiting to become the next generation to bring kids on more meetings.

Those challenges of course include endless energy resources. Destruction of the Earth's climate control center (rain forests), and the destruction of the Earth's climate control center for the next 70 years. It was the need for elevated help from teachers, scientists, industry professionals, and social organizations. The plan is to create one specific video, field trips, computer programs, and activities.

In the main house, Patrick and other also on establishing a relationship with the Southern Maine Fair and other social organizations that deal with the problem of the climate control center. Consultations with National Geographic, the Cosmos Society, the Audubon Society, and other environmental organizations are necessary for the protection of the environment. And the organization is looking for the next 70 years.

Remember the name Future Earth, Inc. It will be exciting in its purpose to educate a young people on the ways to save the world. This is the future for us in the coming days. Let's not fail and have every day taken into the day. Both Patrick and the group encourage folks of all ages to sign up for a Future Earth event by shopping a few to Future Earth of R.O. Box 1204, Portland 04104.
