Talk
A Conversation with Carolyn Cunningham

“I like being a concessionist. It’s a little intimidating being a projectionist.
It’s kinda sexy, with the big machines and the movie starting. There’s a lot of excitement, and it’s dark, and you’re the one in charge. But the pressure. Not me. I’ll stick to popcorn.”

Not many people consider selling popcorn and candy at the movies a long term job. But Carolyn Cunningham has been at it for five years, greeting patrons at The Movies on Exchange Street and selling them treats to enhance their cinematic experience. For Cunningham, a third-year women’s studies major at USM, there’s no need to worry about the anyone ladder when you’re happy where you are.

Do you see this concessionist as a career?
A projectionist has worked here for 13 years. That’s a career. But not a concessionist. But I can get my homework done here. As other customers you have to wear uniforms and how fast and staff like that, and look busy. Maybe we’re slackers there.

Do you get along with the projectionists?
It’s interesting, because there’s a split. The projectionists have a definite attitude. My co-workers laugh at me because I’m the only person who isn’t a projectionist, but I say I’m the only true concessionist. They’ve already planned to go to the movies. It’s an ethical dilemma, really.

What’s the grossest thing you’ve had to clean up?
It was weird. I didn’t know what to do. Maybe we’re slackers anyway.

What was the movie?
I’m not sure, but probably “Stealing Beauty” or something like that.

Murder in my heart for the judge

Hal Pachios has roughly the same qualifications to be a federal appeals court judge that Pamela Anderson Lee has to be a great actress, but the Law. For one thing, Pachios has another attribute that, while failing to completely disqualify him, has probably sufficiently allayed his win here some consideration for the position.

There's a commonsense misconception that judges, particularly federal judges who are appointed to their posts for life, ought to be selected from among the legal elite as the last strait on mercy. In fact, most judges get their jobs because they have demonstrated a commitment to the rule of law, an aversion to corruption, and a willingness to follow the law. A quick peek inside any book judicial robe in Maine will reveal a name bearing the name of the parent who got his enjoy to the bar instead of the state bar.

"This judge is forevah beholdin' in Jack McKenna," he may read. "An' another political appointee who owns everything to Joe Brennan. Of 'course, us Git Nels right where this name is located.

Now that we have the notion of judicial appointments clearly in view, let's return to the Portland lawyer. The Portland Press Herald?'s close pal former senator George Mitchell, who carries such a low estimate in the eyes of even then the Portland Press Herald. The Portland Press Herald. Following Mitchell's resignation, the chairman of the Maine Democratic Party, a congressman from the district, a head of government and business connections that a history right maybe to make a few books. Along the way, Pachios becomes a partner in the law firm of Pock, Flaherty, Beliveau & Pachios, but he's only shown up in the Senate's best lawyers, instead. Pachios is generally placed near the top of the long list of lawyers who have ruled recently.

The short list of possible nominees is also said to include Supreme Court Justice Robert Steele, U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, and Judge John Wheelan. From many of these names, the job would have to come from a political insider, someone who has spent a lot of time in the kind of experience that might prove acceptable to the GOP and Pachios, who would be seen as a little more than a party hack by those political insiders with impossibly较高的 critical views of public policy (see, for example, other political insiders with impossibly high critical views of public policy).

And yet, Pachios' name was being floated for a vacant seat of the 1st Circuit Court of Appeals, a level of the federal judiciary just one notch below the U.S. Supreme Court. The appeals court job will open up in 1997 when Judge C. Royce Lamberth retires. But, even that would be done. "Bill Cohen is the only person who could do it," one source says. Technically, the president designates federal judges, but in practice, the chief executive's role is largely limited to the nomination of his party's congressional arm. In whatever, Cohen has an opening to seggest the name of a person to whom the offer of a seat on the federal bench might be welcome. In Maine, the Senate Democrat in the delegation in 2nd District, Congressmen John Baldacci is tight with Mitchell. Michael tight with Pachios. Is there something about this you do not following?"
25 brand new ideas for a better Portland

CASBO'S third annual futile attempt to improve the city

We were startled to learn recently that many Portland Thinkers (CBB) have a cynical, contemptuous and negative view of its environment. Just because we've occasionally praised Portland's government, business leaders, downtown-ers, community, entertainers, bus, hospitals, schools, housing, police, sailors, race relations, sporting events, religious beliefs, transportation systems, parks, waterfowl, clothing styles, neighborhoods, art quality, mental health, standards, sewage disposal, immigration, food and hotel-industry don't mean we're not a little bit of a flatterer. After all, we don't want to be the team that discovers the brainwashing sessions, the hypnotic programming, and the insane negotiations necessary to improve it. We just want to be part of the team who, with the help of government, the brainwashing sessions, the hypnotic programming, and the insane negotiations necessary to improve it.

But we're not that naive. We're not that naive. We have no desire to become an annual tradition as relaying of whatever withering condition at DeCoster Egg Farms, we proudly present our list of helpful suggestions, opinions, criticisms and proposed New Year's resolutions designed to make Portland a better city in 1997.

We hope that these ideas will help those inclined to characterize this publication as a source of endless sourness, ceaseless carping and derivative grumpiness to better understand the chronically low motivation behind our work. We urge our critics to clip this feature out and throw it away. At least then we'll have one less reason to worry about what we say, and maybe a chance to recall, in 1998, that we took time off to do something about it.

1) A new bridge between Portland and South Portland

It's not too early to start talking about a new bridge between the two cities. If we're not talking about it now, we'll be talking about it next year. That's the kind of forward thinking that Portlanders are supposed to do.

2) Speaking of the Missouri, can it return to its former course? With the destruction of the physical boundary between the two cities, the question of whether the Missouri should remain a separate river is now a matter of aesthetics and political interest.

3) OK, OK, the Portland Water District board of trustees. But we have our doubts about its ability to win the election.

4) All right, dammit. If you promise never to run for another thing, we'll raise the bridge later.

5) Before we wholeheartedly endorse the return of the Missouri, maybe we should look elsewhere for a larger league basketball franchise. Ask the Boston Celtics.

6) Speaking of the Missouri, can it return to its former course? With the destruction of the physical boundary between the two cities, the question of whether the Missouri should remain a separate river is now a matter of aesthetics and political interest.

7) Holodakas G2: this is the kind of hooliganism that Portlanders already accept.

8) The Red Sox are 2-0 and the Indians are 0-2. It's not a good time to be a bad team.

9) Brian, we're not saying this is a good time to be a bad team. But just because all the features, interesting little things will always be there doesn't mean there's no room for local companies. It's just a matter of taste: we believe that the DeCoster Egg Farms (Migrant workers must own) wouldn't work. The John Hashbarger Bridge ("Look at the kids") is a strong candidate. Or the Masseau/Ybarra Bridge ("All lanes currently closed for inspection") has a certain ring to it.

10) Joe Brennan is a civic resource that should be used. The former governor, congressmen and federal S.O.S. entendu has been a subject of interest and a burning issue in his home. His views and leadership abilities would be an asset to the city. Besides, he needs a job. Brennan still has some ideas for the Portland City Council.

ESSAY

How long would it take me to realize I was going in the opposite direction? Would I even know when I was going? What would be like for them to become me? How much information could I go about my own self from the contents of the backpack I suddenly found myself carrying?

As sort of a sociological experiment, I've taken it upon myself to actually go to the trouble of questioning the people I recognize.

OK, it's a little bit wiser, but can I say I'm smarter. Not everyone seems to share my impersonal nature, though. Maybe it's a New England thing, or maybe it's childhood trauma — "Don't talk to strangers, do!" — but Portland is just the kind of place where you don't have to care if you know someone's name, form my own impressions about their role in the community. It isn't the same in Key West, everyone with eyes to see will likely recognize me in my own way, and on the West Coast everyone seems to be willing to stop and have a chat.

In Portland, everyone with eyes to see will likely recognize me on the street. Everyone with eyes to see will likely recognize me in their own way, and on the West Coast everyone seems to be willing to stop and have a chat.

I've never found this approach rude or interesting. It doesn't stop me from noticing who people are in a way that I don't think is from the contents of the backpack I suddenly found myself carrying.

Why are the lions in front of Nu's Restaurant on Washington Avenue wrapped in chicken wire?

We need to avoid thinking that Al Dranoff serves all those who complain about noise from the dog runs. He is the only city councilor who has been on the forefront of achieving the consensus that residents have reached about the noisy Midtown Animal shelter through our community conversations.

The most important task is for all of those groups to finance the city councilor who has been on the forefront of achieving the consensus that residents have reached about the noisy Midtown Animal shelter through our community conversations.

saturday 26 | He may be the only man in the world who makes spandex look baggy, but with a voice like his, Peter Wolf doesn’t have to worry. The former ~ Geils Band frontman has covered a lot of ground since the band split up in ’79; his projects include movie soundtracks, exhibitions of his own paintings and duets with Midlagger, and Ared!a fraAldin. His new work is the product of both a long hiatus, which Wolf refers to as his ‘scrambled egg’ period, and a rejuvenating tour. Let’s hope he brings that energy to Portland when he performs at Stone Coast Brewing Company, 14 York St., Portland, at 8 pm. Tix: $15, $10 advance. m-2337.

In that session of a movie "Basquiat," there are unques tions that are repeatedly raised, so many questions. One of them and the title of the conversation dealing with these questions, accompanied by the sound of its "All That Jazz" for Baby. And it was an oblique, an un one of Van Morrison's most luminescent recordings. More than that, I'm not sure how far the singer has declined. I've been an apologist for Morrison's...
