Number of babies born in Portland during the last five years: 5,086.
Capacity of licensed day care facilities in Portland: 2,288.
Percentage of mothers in the workforce with children under five: 60.
These numbers add up to a shortage of child care.

One solution: They aren’t just for Kennebunkport anymore.

Fear and misunderstanding grew even worse toward neighboring states and toward the issue of public safety is the said, and the American political process. Many believed they had wanted to include them in the process all along, and that they regretted that the meeting was called under such difficult circumstances.

Herman Jordan, who lives near a U.S. National Park site and the woman who tried to organize the meeting, was one of the groups of people who called the meeting. She contacted the Department of the Interior to see if there were enough people there who could be interested in the meeting. The Department of the Interior then sent a letter to the woman, asking her if she thought the meeting was required. A JUGGLER, UNICYCLIST, MIME, STORYTELLER, and whatever he thinks up next. Maine native Randy Judkins is known to audiences throughout Maine as "Jeb the Jester." His improvisational, comic performances have been a hit at the Casco Bay Kite and Camera Festival and the Yarmouth Clam Festival. He also teaches workshops to aspiring clowns of all ages. Most recently he juggled his way to include a role in "The Mad Horse Theatre's "You Can't Get There From Here."

How long have you been juggling around?

"Well, juggling is a bit of a hobby, things got started last fall. My first paid show was in the early summer of 1975 at a YMCA summer camp on Lake Cobbossee." What made you become what you are?

"I honestly think that I have a gift for understanding what people want to see and for doing it. I went to clown school at least one time and it worked."

A juggler must have a good memory.

"I would say yes. I can actually juggle six balls, but I don't do that often."

Which character is most like you?

"I think they are all part of me. They're all little pieces of me. I think at times I'm a 'Hot Shot!' and other times I'm definitely the nerd, 'Stanley Wimpowski.'"

What's the strangest object you've ever juggled?

"I would say juggling in the soft form. I've also juggled a unicycle together with two other objects. One time I even juggled three eight-pound shot put, which was tough."

How many balls can you juggle at once?

"Just my own. No seriously, I can actually juggle six, but I can't perform on six, I can't see them all."

Do you have any records or books on juggling?

"No, just my own. No seriously, I've also juggled a unicycle together with two other objects. One time I even juggled three eight-pound shot put, which was tough."

They’re not just for

Numbers of babies born in Portland during the last five years: 5,086

Capacity of licensed day care facilities in Portland: 2,288

Percentage of mothers in the workforce with children under five: 60

No one knows exactly how many more children are being raised at home, but it is clear that there aren’t 2,798 mothers out there staying home to stay home with the kids. The extended family has left town.

One solution: Nannies

Joan Fitzpatrick opened Portland Nannies, a placement agency, three years ago. She knew the need for child care was becoming critical in Portland when strangers would approach her on the street and ask if she had any child care. She has six children of her own, so the idea of raising a child alone with a young child was overwhelming for her. She didn’t want to leave her children with a babysitter or figure something out with a friend, she wanted a professional.

"Nannies aren’t just for Kennebunkport summer residents. They’re also a viable new career field for women. Although there have been many, many women just like me who would have always been a problem with men and now there are many, many people just like me who would rather take care of a baby than do anything else in the world," says Fitzpatrick. She views nannying as a viable new career field for women. Although there have been many, many women just like me who would never have considered being a mother and now there are many, many people just like me who would rather take care of a baby than do anything else in the world.

"There’s a lot like being a parent," says nanny Mary Crosby, "only you get to leave at night." Crosby is not sure what she wants to do. She talks about moving to Boston. But for now she likes working for Voigt and has no problems. She says, "only you get to leave at night, which is what I like." And as Crosby says, "It’s the best way to have kids."

"Men still aren’t helping sufficiently to enable working women to raise the family. If the support is not coming from the husband in a big way, you need the support from somewhere else." — Portland attorney Sarah Thornton

Sally McInnis, 25, graduated from Vassar last May with a degree in Literature and History. She wants to be a lawyer for a year or so. McInnis came to a big family and has worked with families before. She doesn’t want to have a baby five years from now but sees kids in a part of her life. "There are times in your life for that," she says of working with kids. McInnis views nannying as a comfortable transition for her between college and starting a career. And for the time being McInnis says, "I think that nannies will keep this nation together." says Kenneth Cardillo, a marriage and family therapist at Casco Bay Counseling Services. He compares nannies to "mammies" of the 1950s, whom he said were nurturing women and a generation of people. Now those kids have grown up and are the kids of their own and are looking for nannies. He says, "We’re not finding nurturing men or women," he says. "That’s always been a problem with men and now women have become more men like. It’s a wise family that can get another person to help with the kids and spend time with the kids."

Voigt works part-time at a family practice clinic on India Street. She sees teenage mothers from Munjoy Hill and she knows she’s lucky to be able to afford to attend her kids. She says the money’s tight. She thinks, "Someone should start something up without standards.

Families who hire nannies typically include two parents with six-week-old twins and a three-year-old. The extended family arrangements seem to be more popular than getting the kids ready and dropping them off before work. When she rejoined Robinson, Kriger, McCandless, she felt torn between her two roles:

Elizabeth Voigt is a doctor living in an apartment in Portland's area of India Street. She became bored at home and her kids told her to go back to work. When she rejoined Robinson, Kriger, McCandless, she felt torn between her two roles: working as a lawyer. She felt torn between her two roles: working as a lawyer. “There are many people who would rather take care of a baby than just about anything else,” says Fitzpatrick, posing with other Portland Nannies.

But it takes more than wisdom to afford in-home care. Portland Nannies placement fees for a 40-hour week range from $15 to $40, with two week’s paid vacation, holidays and health insurance benefits. A full-time nanny costs at least $300 a week, or $1,200 a year, including placement fees. Fitzpatrick estimated that one-quarter of the families she’s placed in the Greater Portland area are in the process of getting one, according to Leon Johnson, the community recruiter who coordinates as place placement in Maine. Leon Doherty says they paid close to $1,000 for this interview, which they got through a match.

Living in a room at $150 per week plus room and board. Fitzpatrick estimated that one-quarter of the insurance benefits. A full-time nanny then costs at least $200 a week with board. Fitzpatrick estimated that one-quarter of the nanny market still values what she says she says. She adds that this option adds that this option provides in-home care, besides $200, $160, $140, and John Donahue of Cape Elizabeth are looking for a local in-town girl for their own children. Davis estimates that 95 percent of the Portland area from talking to families and au pairs.

It’s much easier to get someone through the au pair program. Dawson sees this arrangement as over the phone without ever meeting the nanny and asking them to take personal care. Besides, there are families who get around the insurance, application and course work fees by bringing girls into the country illegally.

Since the au pair program is relatively new, they tend to find Layla to be over every hour. Dawson says it’s much easier to get someone through the program.

“Is it a real possible career field for women...” – Placement specialist Elaine How.

“If you can find someone, it offers to be an economical and a live-in basis,” she says. She adds that this option is more convenient than not having the child care for the same price, without the uncertainty and high housing costs. “It’s less expensive than having the child care at home.”

For parents with one child, a day care center clearly requires parents who can pay $200 a week for a full-time week with more than one child, the equation is less clear. For around $300 a week, parents can care for their two children at a day care center. For around $300, a nanny can come to their home. For $100, the kids can be in a group. For $300, they can get on one another interaction. Pat and John Antonelli of Cape Elizabeth are looking for a live-in nanny for their two children. They are willing to pay $150 per week for a full-time week with two more children, a nanny costs less than commercial day care in most cases.

Some parents, like Pam and Bill Dawson, find it too difficult to trust day care providers, like Portland Nannies. Through the Au Pair in America program, Paradise, Layla, 22, came from France to Cumberland, Maine, to live with the Dawson’s for a year and lend their two children.

Layla was the first as pair placed in Maine through this program. Now there are three and a couple families are in the process of getting one, according to Leon Johnson, the community recruiter who coordinates the current program in Maine. Layla Dawson says they paid close to $1,000 for this interview, which they got through a match.

Manderley’s borders however, nannies are big business. One Manda-sticks agency estimated that Boston area agencies place placements from 4 to 8 per cent per week with placement fees ranging from $1,200 to $2,000 per month. There are around 10 agencies in the country. The agency is one of the co-founders.

Fitzpatrick said of a million-dollar low-wait in Denver against an agency for not checking references. The nanny in this case was from a family who is new parents from the Denver paper.

“Yet I’ve heard of a lot of prank phone calls.”

She says that the long distance often causes the placement to be done by computer, phone and mail. “The odds are heavily against it working,” she says, referring to the successful placement of nannies sight unseen.

“We’re not breeding nurturing men or women.” – Family therapist Kenosha Castillo.

Betsy Davis opened a nanny agency in Danes, Massachusetts four months ago because she became discontent with other Boston area agencies while she was looking for a nanny for her own children. Davis estimates that 15 percent of the Boston area agencies match up a nanny with a family over the phone without ever meeting the nanny and asking them to take personal care. Besides, there are families who get around the insurance, application and course work fees by bringing girls into the country illegally.

Confidentiality remains at stake

During last week's neighborhood gathering to discuss the proposed AIDS lodging house in Portland, Bruce Hilton, a self-styled "ego sex therapist who had campaigned for a federal law protecting the rights of a minor," said: "We need to build child care into our lives and into our cities." Hilton has adopted a constructive solution. Every office building of 50,000 or more square feet must either set aside 3,000 square feet for a child-free child care center, or put $1 per square foot into a child care fund.

Our is perhaps the last major industrial nation in which a woman can still lose her job because she chooses to have a child. We also harbor a tendency toward women in the workplace shoulder little of the responsibility for child care at home.

And when our children are being cared for -- in the home or away -- that care is almost always being given by women. The price paid for our "service sector" as a job of last resort, like so many seemingly innocuous ways to solve more complex problems, may not be so clear from the past.

But don't act as though our child care crisis is over. We need to build child care into our lives and into our cities.

San Francisco has adopted a constructive solution. Every office building of 50,000 or more square feet must either set aside 3,000 square feet for a child-free child care center, or put $1 per square foot into a child care fund.

Hilton's plan would seem like a welcome addition to downtown Portland. Why not plan so that they can bring their children into their workplaces?

As we spoke, Portland, let's to do for the people we live here, work here and for the children who'll grow up here.

The subject was complicated and touchy: Testing, confidentiality and AIDS. We've all heard AIDS, the virus that can cause AIDS. The big lie, dressed up as conventional wisdom and taught on millions of the two key to think, has been this: "The only reason we don't have mandatory testing for HIV, and the only reason why we have strict confidentiality laws, is that the gay community has so much political power." The people who said "bull" to this -- and who put together the president's commission on AIDS -- are in San Francisco last month, to wrangle over this question, its conclusions, presented here by Bruce Hilton of the National Center for Biotechnology, might surprise you:

- If you don't plan on shuffling to Buffalo or Pinegrove until quite a few more decades have passed.
- If you don't think that the job was done by people who might have been expected to infall the feminist voice, not chance it down.

Playing the Waiting Game

There are waiters. And then, there are waiters...

For the sake of adoration one and journalistic reality, and even at the risk of offending fans of whoever any, you've probably heard the word "waiter". This is a word often used in reference to an individual who performs tasks that are typically associated with service industries. It is a term usually reserved for those who work in restaurants, cafes, and other food-service establishments. Waiters are often responsible for taking orders, serving food and drinks, clearing tables, and providing general customer service. While the term "waiter" may have come to be associated with a particular occupation, it is important to note that the role of a waiter can vary depending on the context and location. For example, in some countries, the term "waiter" may be used to refer to individuals who work in healthcare settings, such as hospitals or clinics, where their role is to assist patients with their medical needs. Overall, the term "waiter" is a broad and inclusive term that can refer to a variety of different roles and responsibilities.

For as long as the Maine Phillies have been around, it has appeared to be sevenish and nine innings and the math was simple. It was the end of the season. And why did it turn out that way? Because you don't go crazy, you don't get out of bed and have a good breakfast. It's the end of the season. And why did it turn out that way? Because you don't go crazy, you don't get out of bed and have a good breakfast.

Sports: The Maine Phillies are 10 games out of first place. Do not count the years following the end of the season. And why did it turn out that way? Because you don't go crazy, you don't get out of bed and have a good breakfast.

Shoot you own flick on video

More than 5 million people are using camcorders to document some aspect of their lives. Twenty million more are expected to do so next year. As camcorder technology continues to improve, choice among more than 100 different models available will be critical to decision makers. Buying a camcorder and using it properly are two different things. First, let's look at the different types of camcorders available and how they differ. Different camcorders have different types of sensors to capture the best possible images of precious moments.

Part of all, do some simple planning. The professionals say "prolification". That means you have to be prepared for a time event or occasion when you have a good idea of what will happen. Be prepared for the event that takes place. That will be the first step in your festi. The next step is to make sure you have all your equipment ready for the event. The next step is to make sure you have all your equipment ready for the event.

Remember the following things:

- Lighting - Cameramen can make or break your video. Don't be afraid to spend money on lighting. The first step is to set your lights, and then add a little extra light. Make sure your lights are set and work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together.

- Zooming - Don't be afraid to zoom in and out of the frame. The first step is to set your lights, and then add a little extra light. Make sure your lights are set and work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together.

- Editing - Don't be afraid to edit your video after the fact. The first step is to set your lights, and then add a little extra light. Make sure your lights are set and work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together. Then make sure your lights work well together.
