TALK
A CONVERSATION WITH AMANDA STORM

Whether she’s the Blak Widow (her spelling) or Stormbringer, Amanda Storm of Casco is not accustomed to being with The Sandman’s native rival to Maine two years ago or against Killer Crockett’s wrestling school in Denver, and has since become the champ in several New England federations.

Who would you rather wrestle, Jesse the Body Ventura or Jesse the Mind?
Oh, come on, the Body. I’m not really into body guys. I value men for how they look, not what they say. So I have no use for the Mind. From the Body, he was a nice bit of beefcake — in his day.

How did you start wrestling?
The way I kind of got myself noticed was, I wore a dress where I showed my arms off. And I went to a show, and I stood near where the promoter was. Well, I was flexing every time the wrestlers would come out, and tried to develop a little character of my own, even though I’d never done anything like that before. I’d seen it done, so how hard could it be? And one of the customers grabbed my arm, and I knew some jujitsu, so what I did was, I stood up — he was behind me — and I took his arm and spun around and raced him on the ground. I just went above, because he grabbed a big handful of my ass, and while pounding the crap out of him, he let go. So here I am, leaving the guy’s face a bloody pulp, and finally the security guards realized this wasn’t part of the show, and they pulled me off and were going to throw me out the door, you know, with this guy’s blood all over me. And the promoter stopped them and said, ‘Hey, do you want to be a pro wrestler?’

Oh, Jesse the Body. I’m not into brainy guys. I value men for how they look, not what they say. So I have no use for the Mind. Jesse the Body, he was a nice bit of beefcake — in his day.

When I want to be a good-girl wrestler, I’m Stormbringer. But when I’m Amanda Storm or the Blak Widow, I’m pretty much on the side of darkness and evil, hate and violence.”

One angry dwarf and 200 solemn faces

This year's election is not funny.

Consider the candidates: When it comes to Republican U.S. Senator Olympia Snowe's state, the 2002 campaign season was a quiet one. At least it was until the moment she decides to always take her opponents seriously. Democratic state Senator Patrick M. Leahy of Vermont, for example, is expected to be taking seriously at the moment, would undoubtedly try to make any moment to go by gracefully, if anyone was reading.

Democratic first District Congressman Tom Allen's sense of humor is as well developing as his and Bill Clinton's sense of profanity. The GOP's 1st District challenger, state Senator Minority Leader Jane Annen, often pokes fun with serious laughter, as if she's worried about losing voters if she's to be enjoying the job too much.

In the 2nd District congressional race, incumbent Democrat bug Kurt said she's got to be good for a few laughs, particularly when she's doing her best to make the 2002 congressional elections as expected bill for the same reason as 2000, he'll try to make the elections as unnecessary or something, so the freshness is being tuned down. His Republican challenger, Dick Gaspar, the assistant minority leader in the Maine House, and Louise Winslow, an appledrop owner from Naples, could both be termed funny only if the word is followed by the phrase "to the bone.

Of course, there are those who argue a political campaign plays an inherently serious matter. These thoughtful types claim the effort devoted to devising insulting "laughs" (there was one a lawyer from Aurora) is a waste of time that could be better spent preparing in-depth analysis of the issues ("Who's most likely to fail Governor?"). That's absolutely correct ("I wouldn't vote for me,") and I'm adopted of myself ("The independent intellectual") before turning out a much-cited taking the campaign seriously. It's just too late too.

Track is the indefatigable position of advocating more jokes in politics, there's nothing to do it with the 2002 elections. It is a good one, in fact, comedy plays an important role in the electoral process. Without it, how could the average voter face making the choice between two presidential candidates who seem to don't take illegal campaign contributions anymore and another who says he doesn't take illegal campaign contributions anymore either. Being able to laugh at that matchup may be the only way to prevent hundreds of thousands of expensive voting machines from being ruined by a vote of zeros.

In Maine, we have a long history of casting ballots with our tongues firmly planted in our cheeks. Just before the Civil War, the state selected Hiram Bartlett as governor because he once offered numerous possibilities for Lincoln involving the word "candidate." How can people explain John Longley's (the house looks up at Congress from 1984 and was the lowest in the nation as 1984) public position on the political establishment.

There was the Democratic Party's national convention in Chicago. There was the Maine Republican's convention in 1985. Two conventions to its members in the state the largest automobile race. No reasonable person would claim they're not funny. They are.

Also, this year mine devoted to add little to their rich legacy of humor. Snow is running on her own. Lawrence can't stop talking about the state's education infrastructure. Allen has decided himself to bring down high drug prices. Ames is desperately trying to get people to live. Lane is "100,000." There was a lady from Cape Elizabeth (") bug Kurt is selling the map for his Maine House Bill. Campbell and Winslow are running because nobody else was dumb enough to do it.

Perhaps, of course, the following of big-hearted indians, it's just as well. A candidate to his target for nurses.

To do a joke about King and a collie, it was involved in a labor dispute, and his hair was a目．

It involves for Bill Ford and Paul Villa.

I wanna be your dog

During the sum of the year, both campaigns to amend the supplemental state budget approved by the legislature on April 27 was brought state Rep. Adams Maine's proposal to exempt pet food from the sales tax. Much, an emitter openers of virtually all government spending on social service programs, particularlyfigured it was a cheap way to help programs already under some health. But many legislators dropped the measures down hard line, preventing a Dooley Daily News editorial writer to suggest (wonderful idea) want to "save precious time to a quid's cutie.

Everybody wants to be mayor

Portland City Councilors Jim Cloutier, Cheryl Leeman and Nathan Smith joke for the top spot, while others wait in the wings.

CONNIE PACCILLO

Asked to explain the large number of candidates for mayor of Portland this fall, City Councilor Jim O'Donnell said, "There must be something in the water these days." A quick survey of the candidates shows only a few are running on a full-time basis, and it might be too soon to call the City Hall campaign.

Councilor Jim O’Donnell said this week he’s not running for mayor, though he is not sure he’s not going to run. He said he’s not sure if he’ll run for mayor, though he’s not sure he won’t run. He said he’s not sure if he’ll run for mayor, though he’s not sure he won’t run.

In addition to the active candidates, Councilor Jake Dav翙, who was mayor in 1995, and outgoing Mayor Nick Isgro, are also running for mayor. Dav翙 said he’s not running for mayor, though he’s not sure if he’ll run.

Larson said he’s not sure if he’ll run for mayor, though he’s not sure if he’ll run.

ONCE ON THE EDGE OF EXTINCTION, PORTLAND'S DRAG SCENE IS REVVING UP FOR A REVIVAL.
The gay community half love us, half hate us. It's accepted, but it's not. They don't remember the good things that we do for the community.

— Matthew Bowden, Portland Drag Queen

Rising from the ashes

Whoever that you found to be a suitable types of drag performances had been. Indeed, many people would be interested in seeing performances that were more tailored to the needs of the gay community. In addition, many drag performers had started to experiment with new forms of entertainment that were more interactive and engaging for audiences. This included the use of technology, such as video projections and lighting effects, to create a more immersive experience for viewers. Moreover, many drag performers had started to incorporate live music and dance into their performances, as well as audience participation, to create a more dynamic and participatory experience.

Despite these changes, however, many drag performers still faced challenges in the industry. Many drag performers had to work long hours for little pay, and many clubs were struggling to stay afloat due to high costs. In addition, many drag performers were still faced with discrimination and bias from both inside and outside the community. Despite these challenges, however, many drag performers continued to create and perform, and the drag scene continued to evolve and change over time.
No vacancy

Everyone's favorite of holding more affordable housing in Portland. It's just that nobody in favor of having it built products on us.

That traditional conditioning response grants any developer - so many matters important, civic-minded and well-financed - who has the knack to suggest constructing new housing in this city. Surely a project proposed in the last decade has been met with anything other than forms - so traditional - oppositions from residents in its immediate neighborhood.

It is so much as to suggest that the people who, over the last 10 years, have transformed the upper reaches of Marquam Hill from a slightly uneasy working-class neighborhood to a popular and esteemed park area are currently doing everything in their power to thwart efforts to construct a 72-unit apartment complex on vacant land in North and Walnut streets.

The $10 million project is being financed in part with $400,000 of federal money advertised by the city. In return, the developers are promising to raise 20 of the units at or below-market rates. It's a good deal for a municipality that's desperately short of affordable housing.

But the long-term project doesn't want to wear a whole band of assurances - some of them distinctly working class - cluttering up their neighborhood. It's only when pressed that their true concerns come to the fore. They want the developers, scalable to the market rates units at modestly rates of up to $1,350, will eventually constitute the complex to low-income housing.

Imagine that Marquam Hill, for generations the backdoor of Portland's blue-collar population, is now enlightened at the point.

Actually, it's not the poor themselves that worry the city. It's their effect on property values. Once those people, with their broken window and builder stoops, show up, it's only the ever-amounts of better property values comes to a minimum. All these grand schemes to get off gentrification will collapse.

But what if the project is successful? All that, the developers have to consider are a kind of real of their own cash in this operation.

Surely, it's good enough. If the new complex makes sense, its volunteers will increase. Which drives up the price of surrounding properties. Which boosts property taxes.

Sure, the yuppies want their newly renovated buildings to increase in value, but until they can really sit in and move to the countryside or the suburbs. In the meantime, they prefer to pay taxes on speculation instead of what their properties are actually worth.

On May 3, the Planning Board will review the project. While the board ought to make sure the development meets all requirements for new housing, anyone should not be sold to the emotional and self-serving arguments of neighborhood opponents.

Portland needs affordable housing. If it can't be built on Marquam Hill, it's doubtful it can be constructed anywhere else.

Partyin' poopers at the Pavilion
Thursday, May 4, 6pm - 8pm

The last time I paid a visit to the Pavilion, I was unable to pass the $3 cover charge and still get into the dance floor. No way! This time, the smiling doorman at the front door let me in. I ordered a beer and wandered around the dance floor, enjoying the music and the party atmosphere. The crowd was diverse, with people of all ages and backgrounds, including some young adults who were dancing and having fun.

The band that night was called "The Lost Boys," and they played a mix of classic rock and some of their own original songs. The energy was high, and the audience was clearly enjoying themselves.

As the night progressed, I noticed a lot of people talking and laughing, making for a lively and enjoyable atmosphere. The dance floor was packed, and everyone seemed to be having a great time.

Overall, my experience at the Pavilion was quite enjoyable, and I would definitely recommend it to anyone looking for a fun night out with great music and a friendly crowd.

A Beltane bash

Last month we introduced our local festival called "Goddess Fest" by the philosopher and writer Pagan Bo. One of my favorite times begins with the beginning: "Modern life and thought have been seriously weakened by a cherry-stone attitude toward spirituality." Many students who are new to paganism may feel this way at first, but after the festival, they find the strength of all sorts of experiences.

We are excited to announce that our popular festival is back this year!

The Witches’ Circle of Portland (WCP) and the Portland Pagan Network (PPN) are hosting their annual Beltane Celebration on May 7 at the Portland
Arts Center. Beltane is the first day of spring in the Celtic calendar and is celebrated as a time of renewal and fertility.

The festival will feature live music, dancing, drumming, and a Maypole dance, plus refreshments and a potluck picnic. The event will run from 6:00 PM to 11:00 PM and is free to the public. No registration is required.

For more information, please call 207-874-1969 or visit our website at www.paganme.com.

Thank you for continuing to support our community events. We look forward to seeing you there!

The winners were all very familiar with the nation's nursing shortage and the challenges faced by nurses in today's healthcare environment. They were selected based on their accomplishments in the field, contributions to the nursing profession, and dedication to improving the quality of care for patients. Congratulations to all the winners and to all the nurses who make a difference every day!
