The Washington, D.C., hardcore quartet Fugazi wears its working-class ethics on its sleeve, charging just five bucks for concert tickets and just nine bucks for a CD. The band’s records, released on its own independent label, sell tremendously well. Dan Short reports on the Regal legend—and the music.

Marsha Campbell of Portland, with the shovel she used to bury her father’s ashes: “If someone in the family wants something more formal they can let me know.”

Instead of placing the casket on view in a general parlor, Campbell opted to have the ashes, placed in a simple cardboard box, be buried in a small plot adjacent to the Friends Meeting House on Forest Avenue near the Portland city line.

“Six a friend and I marked the site with a simple field stone,” she said.

Campbell’s experience with her father’s death prompted her to become a member of the Maine Memorial Society, a 2,000-member, non-profit organization that aids its members in finding simple, dignified and inexpensive alternatives to funeral-home burials.

Society members say that everyone should know the options. You can choose an expensive service, complete with gold-plated Cadillac hearse and a graveside service. Or you can choose direct cremation. You can choose to embalm, or not to embalm. You can even choose to bury your loved ones in your own backyard—a practice that’s permitted in Maine, but not in nearby states, including New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

Not only will such an approach save money, but those who have done it say it’s the most dignified way to show reverence to the dead.

Betty Fiske of Lewiston, one of Maine’s pioneers in alternative burial practices, adds that bypassing the funeral home may seem a little peculiar. She insists, though, that it’s more natural than calling in the undertakers, and better allows the living to begin the grieving process. “Ordinary people just call a funeral director to take the body away, curl the hair, put the make-up on and display the body in a fancy casket,” she said.

Leigh Sellick of Portland is known as the City Trapper. He says, "I feel like people are very interested in trapping. It's a way for people to connect with the outdoors, and it's a way to protect their property." He says that he prefers to use peanut butter as bait, because it's easier to find and it's more effective than other types of bait. He also uses some other types of bait, such as apples or bread, but says that peanut butter is the best overall.

A retired Portland firefighter, Sellick has trapped more than 1,000 animals since he started his business eight years ago. He says that he uses a variety of traps, depending on the animal. For example, he uses a live trap for skunks, a coon trap for raccoons, and a leg hold trap for porcupines.

Sellick says that the animals definitely have personalities. Some, like skunks, are very shy and will try to hide. Others, like raccoons, are more outgoing and will try to get close to him. He says that it's important to be patient and calm when trapping, and to use the right type of bait for each animal.

Leigh Sellick's trapping business is a great way to learn more about the outdoors and to connect with nature. He says that he enjoys trapping and that it's a great way to spend time with his family. He also says that he's always looking for new ways to improve his trapping skills.

Maine has recorded 23 ozone alert days this year, according to the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP). Although there may be several more days of unhealthy air by 1993, it appears that the state will likely keep the 15 unhealthy air days recorded last year, and 1980, when the state first started keeping a tally. DEP air quality specialist Andy Soloman says the state’s ozone alert days showed that tougher standards are needed. But Aquino said his parents think the program is a good idea.

Lobstermen may work bankers’ hours to avoid a stale in the maximum legal labor rate. Under the new regimen last month designed Gulf of Maine labor is compensated at an "accidental" rate. They told the labor industry to develop a management plan by Oct. 21 to reduce the catch by 20 percent over the next four years. If the plan emerges, the maximum legal labor rate will be increased.

Lobsters are moving to several coastal towns this week, including South Portland, as the active fishing season is expected to include sheltered waters in Casco Bay.

Lobster most likely to work extra hours is a legal labor rate of a recent meeting at the Portland office of David Cooper, president of the Maine Lobstermen’s Association. Tom Andrews will try to ban the use of defense contractors’ funds for arm races. Andrews wants to amend the U.S. House defense spending bill but he will probably be withdrawing some reports with conversion funds. His amendment — filed to the House floor in Sept. 4 — is aimed at defense contractors who would rather not assess them if they convert to commercial products.

Lobsterman made a similar proposal to the House Armed Services Committee but failed to get enough funding. The industry standards chairman, the House floor in Sept. 5 — is aimed at defense contractors who would rather not assess them if they convert to commercial products.

NAFTA was named by Maine Attorney General Mike Carpenito. The state’s law enforcement officer warned that the North American Free Trade Agreement could endanger Maine’s legal system. Anyone who violates a NAFTA agreement could end up in federal court.

A NAFTA is designed to phase out most barriers to free trade among the United States, Mexico, and Canada. Opponents claim the NAFTA’s sweeping language would erode state power. They say it will be in their interest to develop environmental and labor standards. In U.S. employees’ best company with Mexican companies. ERR

Carpenito’s and NAFTA’s statement was made, considerably, in the same week that he took over as attorney general.

BURRY YOURSELF

It has always been legal to bury kiss on your own in Maine. In fact, until the end of the 18th century, the traditional New England funeral was very typical of a funeral service. The family washed and draped the body, built a fire pit on the front porch, and the family member in the process of recovery had officially packaged what Americans today might call "a traditional funeral."

Today, both the family and the relative are involved in planning and the service is usually conducted in the family home or church. The service is held in private. The family members always conduct the service in private and those who attend do so quietly. The family and friends keep the service to themselves. The service is held in private. To EMBRALM OR NOT TO EMBRALM

Funeral directors often tell consumers that embalming, followed by cosmetic restoration, is essential. Services benefit emotionally and psychologically from restoring the dead, they say, and the dead should look their best for burial. In addition, many funeral directors insist that embalming is required for sanitary and public health reasons.

Portland funeral director David Jones of Ross, Rick and Hiltz Funeral Home said, "Purchase from us or from the country have proven that the human body is a necessary part of the path of grief. Furthermore, if kept in contact with the dead body for two days without embalming, not only would their fingers turn blue, but there would be an unpleasant body discharge and odor."

Funeral director Mark Kellermeyer of Portland funeral home Bay Ey and Paulson said his firm would not do an open casket viewing of an unembalmed body unless the family requests not to view it.

"When the body is greatly wasted with Eulid dysenteric, and the local funerals are assembled," the deceased," as the was shot through the gun and the gas gun is used, removing the reason in the class limit, then the non-invasive property with open caskets," the body is ready to pull the body to the lady.

"If the body is greatly wasted with Eulid dysenteric they are usually not in the neck and one in the grins. Clean tubing is inserted into the openings of the other side of the tube is pulled up to the opening, a tube that looks somewhat like a food processor. A saline solution is run through the body, pulling out all the dry blood and sharing the channels. The blood is boiled from the drain, and into the city saner system.

Near, the embalming fluid— generally a mixture of chemicals including benzine, glycerin and red coloring—is intended to replace the body fluids.

"Then the face is returned to the family, and a full schedule of the life of the deceased, as well as the family, is reviewed."

Deconstructing Portland's great wall of timber

By Cassie Hobbs

Commercial Street's Great Wall of Timber—a pile of tree-length logs 26 feet high and a half-mile long on the Portland waterfront—was loaded there by boat to China over Labor Day weekend. Again at D.E. Warren Co., the Westbrook company involved in the deal, hopes for a repeat performance—possibly in February or March.

A number of firms and people stand to do well with this new export trade—selling, the D.E. Warren Co. John A. Sibley, a Portland-based consultant who packaged the deal, and the C.P. Group, a Thai trading company who is marketing the hemlock logs, valued at $3 million, to trade.

But not the state of Maine or the local economy. It's all up to whom you talk to.

“Great Wall of Timber—a pile of tree-length logs at the local sawmill.”

By Cassie Hobbs

In an unusual crossover of opposing views, lumber users like Bunby agree with environmentalists that exporting whole logs should be controlled in some manner. So lumber users want to protect their business, as well as capture some of the export market. Environmentalists want to slow the pace of harvesting and discourage the “gold-mine” mentality. While both groups may have differing ideas about preserving the forest, both want Maine to have an ample supply of trees in the future. And both see job creation as one way to meet that goal.

Prejudice rears its ugly head

By Mishe Pietkiewicz

David Lynch's 1980 black-and-white cult film version of Bernard Pomerance's play "The Elephant Man" catapulted artsy groupies into theater roles they had thought impossible about a new aesthetic: "The truly beautiful could only be found at the heart of the rudely horrifying," Actor John Hurt wanted nothing left to the imagination in that respect. He was more than happy to remove his makeup to reveal his reams of elephantiasis, a malformation of the body that produced tangled, finger-like growths.

"The Elephant Man" explores stigmas old and new. "The most striking feature about him was his enormous head. Its circumference was about that of a man's waist. From the brow there projected a huge bony mass like a loaf, while from the back of his head hung a bag of spongy fungous-looking skin, the surface of which was comparable to brown cauliflower ..."

Director Allen, who is also directing the show, said he is shaping the play as a metaphor for people living with AIDS and the HIV virus.

Allen sees a potentially powerful analogy between the story of Victorian Londoner Joseph Merrick (played by Chris Welch) and today's society. He also sees the elephantiasis "a symbol of the disease, a metaphor for the disease, a symbol for what society is doing to people living with AIDS ..."

"The Elephant Man" opened in Brunswick, Maine, on September 9, 1993, with a run of 30 performances. It was the first time the play has been produced in Maine.

In June 1900 Steve and Happy Harris purchased Ruski's Deli on Market Street. They renamed it to "Ruski's Deli" and began to offer fresh, homemade food. They were known for their delicious hot dogs, which were made with fresh ingredients.

In 1930, the building was renamed "Ruski's Deli" once again, and it has remained a family-owned business ever since. The owners have always been committed to providing high-quality food and exceptional service to their customers.

Over the years, Ruski's Deli has become a beloved institution in the community. It has been featured in numerous local publications, and it has even been the subject of a book.

In addition to its reputation for delicious food, Ruski's Deli is also known for its exceptional service. The employees are always friendly and accommodating, and they go out of their way to make sure that each customer is satisfied.

Ruski's Deli is a place where people come to enjoy good food and good company. It is a place where people can relax and unwind, and it is a place where people can meet and make new friends.

In conclusion, Ruski's Deli is a true American institution. It has been a beloved part of the community for over 100 years, and it continues to provide delicious food and exceptional service to its customers. Whether you are a local or a visitor, Ruski's Deli is a place that you will want to visit again and again.
thursday

Came on: "This afternoon, the Portland Vegetable Soup Company, known for its "Portland-style" soups, will host a public event in collaboration with the Portland Public Library. A panel of local chefs will discuss the benefits of using locally sourced ingredients, and attendees will have the opportunity to try various soups made from these ingredients. The event is free and open to the public.

Friday 10

We don't know what New York pastor Rev. J. William Porteous meant when he said, "If you don't say the thing, you can't do it," but we do know that the Portland, Maine, premier premiere will be held in Portland on Friday, Sept. 14, from 1-10 pm.

Saturday 11

The third annual Breakfast in Bed is set for Monday, Sept. 14, at 8:00 am. The event, which began in 1995, is a fundraiser for the Portland Education Foundation. It's open to the public and will feature a full breakfast and live music.

Sunday 12

Can't believe it, but our favorite Portland, Maine, breakfast & dinner spot, the Portland Observatory, will be celebrating its first anniversary on Sunday, Sept. 15, from 5-9 pm. The event will feature music, drinks, and a special menu.

Monday 13

Breaking through the barriers: The Portland Observer will host a panel discussion on Monday, Sept. 16, at 7:00 pm. The event is open to the public and will feature local experts discussing the importance of diversity in media.

Tuesday 14

Tongues in 8's, the Movie: The Portland Independent Film Festival will host the premiere of a new film on Tuesday, Sept. 17, at 7:00 pm. The event is open to the public and will feature a Q&A with the filmmakers.

Wednesday 15

What is a "performance right?" Why should you care? The Portland Observer will host a workshop on Wednesday, Sept. 18, at 6:00 pm. The event is open to the public and will feature a discussion on the importance of performance rights for creators.

Thursday 16

For one time only, it's an all-day event in Portland: The Portland Independent Film Festival will host the "Portland Film Festival," featuring short films and music performances. The event is open to the public and will run from 10:00 am to 10:00 pm.

THE NETWORKS' IDEA OF A GOOD NEIGHBOR POLICY: YOU PAY FOR THEIR PROGRAMMING, YOUR NEIGHBORS DON'T.

Cable subscriber: network tax

Cable customers like you who are building the networks out. A year from now, if certain networks get their programming that has always been free. Well, the networks did what so now, the networks will pull their programming and will be charging cable subscribers to pay for it 12 times a year.

Non-cable subscriber: no network tax

Fugazi defends the punk ethos without compromise

By Dan Stern

Considering that its members had fled Washington, D.C., it's no surprise that Fugazi has become a symbol of punk's anti-establishment politics. The band's history is marked by legal battles with the networks that have paid them to play in exchange for airplay. The result is preaching at its most annoying and least effective.

On the other hand, it's no Fugazi's punk ethos to understand that the band's hard-core fans are the same people who have supported the networks. It's no Fugazi's punk ethos to understand that the band's hard-core fans are the same people who have supported the networks. It's no Fugazi's punk ethos to understand that the band's hard-core fans are the same people who have supported the networks.

But Fugazi's punk ethos is to understand that the band's hard-core fans are the same people who have supported the networks. It's no Fugazi's punk ethos to understand that the band's hard-core fans are the same people who have supported the networks.

Fugazi offers up power, passion and focus — without a corporate seal.
