PRAGNANT BODY CAUSE IF YOU WANT TO KNOW WHAT HAPPENED THAN THE JUDGE ENZ.
Andy Brettell is the deputy master (vice principal) of a primary school in London. He's spent the past three weeks on vacation in Maine, mostly at Higgins Beach in Scarborough. As a first-time visitor to America, he's been slightly baffled by the differences between the beach scene here and in England.

Tell me why you find our beach-going so odd.

In the U.K., we expect a very limited amount of luxury in any outdoor activity. Part of the fun for us is knowing that if you want to go to the beach, then you're going to be sat on your ass on a towel and that the sand will get into your sandwich and that your drink won't be cold. Then you feel good because you have experienced the very outdoors, and you've done it and there was suffering.

If everything was exactly right then there has been no achievement in it, no satisfaction. We expect our rucksacks to dig into our backs. And that's fine. I was quite shocked to find that even little children expect ice water at the beach. And a chair. Children in England carry these little plastic boxes and expect their water to be tepid.

Anything else that's irksome?

The other thing I find a bit odd is these police with guns in their holsters at the beach to control traffic. In England, a policeman might wear a gun to a drug bust, but not to the beach to tell people where they can park and where they can't. That's very strange. Actually, it's a bit mad if you think about it.

It's 11:15 p.m. on a weekday and you're speeding down High Street toward 295. The roadway is busy and you're looking forward to getting home to saddle up. The red light at the corner of High Street and Park Avenue is still 12 inches under 30 seconds.

Traffic division. "It's a pretty bad spot during these hours," he added. "Sometimes we get up to 300 vehicles per hour in these hours."

Former governor Jock McKernan is trying to make a name for himself through the difficult process of deciding who to back in the upcoming presidential campaign. He knows his options are limited by the same party rules that he employed in Maine, so he has to make a tough decision.

The Casco Bay Weekly's John Martin is one of a number of independent journalists who will be writing about the campaign. McKernan isn't attending the forum that McKernan didn't attend because a Maine Republican Senator, Republican Sen. Susan Collins, isn't running in the state of Maine. The Republican candidate in Maine is Angus King, who is running as an independent.

A number of political operatives from the previous election are making attempts to appeal to Maine voters. The most independent Angus King. Jock McKernan showed up on campaign in October 1994, a tough race for him. His campaign in Maine is not as well-funded as in previous races.

There was another reason for Jock's cold response to the Republican presidential sweepstakes. There was another reason for Jock's cold response to the Republican presidential sweepstakes.

“If you’re going to take from the bay a lot, you’ve got to pay it back.”
-JoAgness Pasquarella, in Casco Bay as part of a volunteer project (from the Casco Bay Estuary Project).

The bay has a powerful not to cleanse itself. If you’re going to take from the bay a lot, you’ve got to pay it back,” she reasons.

But she can’t be too honest. In fact, Pasquarella is just one of 150 new volunteers for the Casco Bay Estuary Project. These volunteers work part-time work to help clean our coastal waters, keeping an eye on the natural environment and the bays.

The idea for the estuary project was formed over 10 years ago by the town of Portland. This was a way to help the bay clean itself.

That idea has evolved into a series of initiatives, including beach clean-ups and bay-side events. The project involves a lot of work, but it’s something we can all do.

Waterworld
As a rule, our backyard bay is usually shaped like a shell and the water is clear. If you look closely, you can see the edges of the bay and the rocks under the water.

The estuary project has been working to help the bay clean itself. They’ve been working on collecting water samples and studying the bay. The project has been given a lot of help from the bay’s citizens, who volunteer their time to help the project.

Nonpoint source pollution — the accumulation of polluted runoff — to the bay’s bottom. It’s a problem that’s been going on for years, but it’s something we can all do something about.

For all these successes, however, there is still a great deal of work to be done. Nonpoint source pollution — the accumulated runoff from streets, fields, farms, and so forth — contributes a significant part of the bay’s pollution.

The estuary project has never been examined in detail.

All of this is interesting and useful to know. But I still don’t think it will be easy to change the bay’s bottom. It’s something we can all do something about.

So, let’s do it. Let’s help the bay clean itself. Let’s do it together.
mitigation and management of pollution. The implications of the proposed EPA methods are worrying," said Patricia Harrington, director of the environmental group. "We are 73 percent funded by the EPA. The most significant effect will be a loss of momentum," agreed Mark Smith, who keeps an eye on the estuary project for EPA out of Boston. (The estuary project is not just a few people sitting in a room and making up programs. It's many people working on different projects in the local area. Althea O'Hare of the Department of Environment concludes Harrington. "Grassrootsyped is a great word. It's just so hard to be doubted that it will actually happen."

The implications of the proposed political changes, acknowledged Harrington. "We came up with important things that can be done without new funding sources or new regulations."

Indeed, the estuary project's dual nature will be enhanced under the new administration. In fact, EPA has already decided that the estuary project is good work and has budgeted four more years of support, in the round of $300 000 a year. Maine will add another $100 000 to the pot. (though that's only a fraction of the $1 million that EPA cutbacks are to the question of what to do next without new funding sources.)

Harrington. "We came up with important things that can be done without new funding sources or new regulations."

How to make up the missing dough? The EPA's Mark Smith said. "It's a matter of planning. without healthy links, there is no way to do it." He was looking for ways to save money. "We're a small office," he said. "We're a line-item budget. If the office is a line-item budget, then we have to figure out how to save money."

Comment
It's a bird! It's a plane! It's Superfund!

Republican cars in EPA's budget, plus a diminution of rule changes, could suck to the environment.

The Bush administration has poured a lot of ink into discussing EPA's role in cleaning up the environment. It has introduced legislation that would drastically water down the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Safe Drinking Water Act. It has proposed over 100 changes in EPA's rules to make it easier for polluters to discharge toxic wastes and other pollutants into our air and water bodies. It has even prohibited EPA from issuing additional rules to combat global warming and acid rain.

The Bush administration is working to roll back crucial environmental protection measures. It has taken the Bush family name and attacked environmentalists, saying they are “too PC” and “too soft” on the environment. This is an attack on our right to breathe healthy air, drink clean water, and have a healthy planet.

The Bush administration's anti-environmental policies are a threat to our health, our economy, and our future. The Bush administration is putting profits over people.

WASTE CURTIS

Superfund

The Superfund program is a national effort to clean up the toxic waste sites created by polluters. It is funded by a tax on industry and is intended to clean up sites that are so toxic that no one can use them for anything.

It was created in 1980 after a series of toxic waste spills and leaks in the United States. The program is run by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

The program has a goal of cleaning up all sites within 30 years. This is a difficult goal to achieve, but it is necessary to protect our health and environment.

The program is funded through a tax on industrial polluters. This tax is collected and paid into a trust fund, which is used to pay for the cleanup of toxic waste sites.

The program has been criticized for being slow and ineffective. Some sites have taken years to clean up, and some sites have never been cleaned up.

The Bush administration is trying to weaken the Superfund program by reducing the tax on industrial polluters and cutting funding for cleanup.

The Bush administration is putting profits over people, and they are putting our health and environment at risk. We need to stand up and demand that the Bush administration fund the Superfund program and keep it strong.

Let's stand up and fight for a healthy environment!

Have faith in Sandy

I write from Sandy, a city in southern Maine. This is my first experience with a hurricane, and I've been watching the news closely. It's been an honor to serve as editor, and I've been reading your words of encouragement and support.

The hurricane has left a trail of destruction in its wake, with widespread power outages, flooding, and structural damage. Businesses, homes, and communities are struggling to recover.

I want to express my gratitude to all those who have offered assistance and support during this difficult time. Your kindness and generosity have been a beacon of hope in the midst of adversity.

The residents of Sandy are resilient and determined to rebuild. We are grateful for the help we have received, and we will continue to work together to restore our community.

May the spirit of the hurricane help us to come together and support one another in the days ahead.

Sandy Flaherty

1. Maine's all wildcats and water could suffocate other indigenous species from the freshwater habitats they thrives in.

2. The use of CRMs to target and plan management actions is a common practice in conservation organizations.

3. CRMs can also be used to identify gaps in existing data and to prioritize areas for further study.

4. CRMs can help identify areas of high risk for extinction and aid in the development of conservation strategies.

5. CRMs are an essential tool for conservation planning and management.
Secrets of Portland
OK, the tourists are just about to leave. Let's have fun again. Here's the skinny.

Labor Day is nearly here, and it will be here in a week. The literature of weather was in the office this morning, preparing the forecast for the weekend. Most of the stories were about the expected high temperatures in the 70s, but a few were about the possibility of showers and thunderstorms. The forecast for the weekend was about 80% chance of rain, with a high of 80 degrees Fahrenheit.

2. Jay York's studio
The York studio is one of the most unique places in Portland. The studio is open to the public, and visitors are encouraged to take a tour. The studio is located in a 180-year-old historic building, and visitors can see the artist working on his latest sculptures. The studio is open daily from 10am to 5pm.

3. Cobblestone streets
Portland has some of the most beautiful cobblestone streets in the country. The streets are lined with trees, and the cobblestones add a touch of charm to the city. The streets are closed to traffic on certain days, and visitors can walk and take in the beauty of the city.

4. Log cabin
Believe it or not, there is a set of old log cabins still standing in Portland city limits. Just off Ocean Avenue, near Payne Park, a small group of cabins sits on the side of the street. The cabins are made of wood, and they are surrounded by a small garden. The cabins are open to the public, and visitors can see the inside of the cabins.

5. Ellie in town
Local artist Robert Winslow is in full production on his latest sculpture. The guy has done everything from marble to bronze, but his latest sculpture is his best work yet. The sculpture is a life-sized statue of a woman, and it will be on display at the Portland Museum of Fine Arts.

6. Garden hose
The garden hose is a symbol of Portland's love of nature. Portland is known for its beautiful gardens, and the garden hose is a symbol of the city's appreciation for the natural world. The garden hose is a symbol of Portland's love of nature, and it is a reminder of the city's connection to the natural world.

7. The Blueberry Hill Inn
The Blueberry Hill Inn is a historic inn located in downtown Portland. The inn is known for its delicious breakfasts, and it is a popular destination for visitors. The inn is open daily from 7am to 9pm.

8. The Seafood Market
The Seafood Market is one of the best places to visit in Portland. The market is located in the heart of the city, and it is known for its fresh seafood. The market is open daily from 9am to 5pm.

9. The Portland Art Museum
The Portland Art Museum is one of the most popular museums in the city. The museum is located in downtown Portland, and it is known for its beautiful collection of art. The museum is open daily from 10am to 5pm.

10. The Portland Public Library
The Portland Public Library is a beautiful library located in downtown Portland. The library is known for its collection of books, and it is a popular destination for visitors. The library is open daily from 9am to 9pm.

11. Strolling in the museum
We all love strolling in the museum, and we've plucked down each other and happily stopped at our favorite Portland museums of Art. But sometimes you just have to get up and start to pay for it.

12. West and rummage sale
This place doesn't look anything like a rummage sale, but you're looking at one of the best. We'll start at 1pm, then go over to the next rummage sale, which is at 2pm. We'll be there for the whole sale, and we'll be there for the whole sale.
