A CONVERSATION WITH NANCY 3. HOFFMAN

"There's sort of an absurdity about them that struck me as ... amazing,"

Last year, musician Nancy 3. Hoffman opened in her home on Peaks Island what she believes to be the world's only umbrella cover museum. (Admission is by foreign currency only.) The museum's mission statement: "The Umbrella Cover Museum is dedicated to the appreciation of the mundane in everyday life. It is about finding wonder and beauty in the simplest of things, and about recognizing that there is always a story behind the cover."

What kind of interest has the museum generated?

People do get very enthusiastic. They've said it's changed their lives, it's been surprising and delightful.

I'm sure you're often asked which are your favorite covers?

Yes, but there is a plain black umbrella cover from Italy that I'm very fond of because I wanted to bring a cover back, but I didn't want to buy an umbrella. I was walking down a street called the Corte dei Miracoli, which means "the Court of Miracles," and I looked down, and there was this umbrella cover, waiting to be picked up.

What is the function of an umbrella cover?

I've since come to find out that they really are useful. They keep your umbrella neat. They also keep the wetness off of other things. If you, for instance, go into a store after a storm and you close up your umbrella and you put the pocket on there, it's really a nice, thoughtful thing to do, to keep the umbrella from dampening the merchandise.

There's one wall of 10 or 15 covers pinned up next to each other. Next to them is a postcard of a row of condoms similarly arranged.

There is a similarity, but it was not consciously made when the museum was started. A friend of mine picked up this particular postcard and generously donated it to the museum as just a small reference to that similar quality.

Could you talk about your two current special exhibits?

We have a special exhibit, which is our first interactive exhibit, that allows the guest to try on the umbrella cover, to feel it, to play with the Velcro and the plastic and just get a real close-up experience with an umbrella cover.

And then there are some examples of some covers that are not umbrella covers. We have a baton cover, and we have a controversial Jewish cover which may be from a small Torah, or it may be a Hanukkah sock, which is used in lieu of a Christmas stocking. Scholars are still debating that point.

Public market, private problems

Portland Public Market has too many rules for some vendors

MARK TUNNER

If you run a company located in Portland’s new $10 million public market, be prepared to chase your own paperwork. For starters, you’ll need detailed charts, a three-year profit-loss statement, a history of your business experience references, a marketing plan, designs for your stall and the market, and a list of your equipment, all of which must be bound in. In addition, you’ll have to explain to the market’s operators how you’ll accommodate food production in the public.

You’ll also have to cough up three types of rent: a base price, a percentage based on sales and a fee to cover operating costs in the market. You’ll be required to be on the premises when the market is open. But the following rules won’t exactly inspire confidence: You may have to compete with other businesses, you may not sublease, the way you’ll be notified of market closures is determined by the market’s operators.

Andrew Siegel, co-owner with his brother Ron of West Fpig Fy fishermen’s Breakfast in York, had initially “very excited about the project.” But Siegel is concerned about the lack of flexibility. “Ours could offer a much more diverse product line than we can,” he said. “It’s hard to make the rent go down.”

Students get a voice — sorta

The school committee representative: Portland high school students will find themselves as the only such group in the state where a representative from each middle and high school is selected from each student group to serve on the school committee. The group is comprised of six seniors, five juniors, four sophomores, three freshmen, two sophomores, one junior, and three freshmen.

A new and successful: Executive Director, Wendy, a junior at Portland High School, described the new school committee as a “new, fresh, and successful.”

You don't have to look far to find people who believe toll money should go first to rural Maine roads.

Some drivers say they think they should spend their money on roads that they use everyday. They say "It's theirs, they only spend theirs."

Vehicles have been moving through toll plazas at 65 miles per hour, and they sometimes have a hard time stopping.

Several truckers pulled at the service plazas and the Maine Turnpike. The top speed limit is 70 miles per hour, but the drivers sometimes have a hard time slowing down.

"We've had to come to a stop several times, and that's been a little bit challenging," said one trucker. "It's a little bit of a problem because we have to make sure we don't hit any other cars."

The fight over the Maine Turnpike widening is about to get ugly, and voters could end up looking like road kill.

There are three main arguments for widening: improvements to the current road, benefits to the economy, and concerns about healthcare costs.

The current road has been in place since the 1970s, and it has been a constant source of frustration for drivers. In 2019, the state announced a plan to widen the road, which has sparked a heated debate among residents.

Supporters of the widening project argue that it is necessary to keep the road open and moving, and that it will bring economic benefits to the region. Opponents argue that the widening will cause more congestion and harm the environment.

According to the Maine Department of Transportation, the widening project is expected to cost $1.5 billion, and it is set to be completed in 2026. The project will include the addition of a third lane in both directions of travel on the 30 miles of highway between York and Biddeford.

The widening project has been controversial, with some people believing that the toll revenue should be used to fund other roads and bridges. In a survey released in May by the Natural Resources Defense Council, 87 percent of voters said they thought repairing other roads and bridges was the highest need, and 87 percent of voters said they would rather see toll revenue go to other road projects.

Some opponents argue that the widening project is not necessary, and that the money could be better spent on other initiatives. However, supporters argue that the project is necessary to keep the road open and moving.

The widening project is expected to be completed in 2026, and it is set to be the largest transportation project in Maine's history.
Bad news for germs.

What better way to welcome Dr. Sanjiv Kumar to Boston than to invite one of the city's most revered physicians and scientists to share his insights with the community.

Dr. Kumar is the founder and director of the Institute for Systems Biology, a non-profit research organization that seeks to understand the fundamental mechanisms of biological systems and to use this knowledge to improve human health.

In his talk, titled "The Future of Medicine: From Germs to Systems Biology," Dr. Kumar discussed the latest developments in the field of systems biology and how they are transforming our understanding of disease and the way we approach treatment.

He emphasized the importance of interdisciplinary collaboration and the role of technology in advancing our knowledge of biological systems.

Dr. Kumar also highlighted the need for a new paradigm in medical education that focuses on the systems-level approach to medicine, rather than the traditional reductionist approach that isolates disease mechanisms in individual organs or tissues.

His talk was well-received by the audience, who applauded his vision for the future of medicine and his calls for a more holistic and integrative approach to health and wellness.

The event was a great success, and Dr. Kumar's insights and passion for systems biology left a lasting impression on all who attended.

The future of medicine is bright, and with leaders like Dr. Sanjiv Kumar in the forefront, we are poised to make significant strides in advancing our understanding of biological systems and improving human health for generations to come.

A victim speaks

I am identically the victim in your feature on "Shopping a thief" (B12, 1997). When I was a single woman living in New York, I had to have phone numbers, which was both costly and unnecessary. I was unable to find a comparable purse, and I was unable to get the police to respond.

I was recently stopped when I returned from New York in 1994. I was able to get the police to respond, and I was able to get the police to respond. On occasion, I suffer torture, and I am unable to control my ability to defend the public with my self-defense laws. I am afraid of the police, and I am afraid of the police. I am afraid of the police, and I am afraid of the police.

It is in my opinion that the police have no ability to do their job, and I am afraid of the police. I am afraid of the police, and I am afraid of the police.

A good sheriff

Sharon Ryan's interview with Cumberland County Sheriff Stanley Bailey (B. 9, 1997) seemed to be more than enough to make our sheriff. Sheriff Bailey was not only a good sheriff, he was a great sheriff. He is in my opinion the best sheriff we have ever had.

Mr. Bailey has the ability to control his temper and to control his temper. He is in my opinion the best sheriff we have ever had.

Violating community standards

In reference to the "Sex in the City" column dated 8/8/97, it is important to note that the average Portlander is not a "so-called" gay person. The average Portlander is not a "so-called" gay person. The average Portlander is not a "so-called" gay person.

Mr. Bailey has the ability to control his temper and to control his temper. He is in my opinion the best sheriff we have ever had.

What is with the scary voice you get when you call information these days? It sounds like Dracula.

As a person who has lived in Portland, I can tell you that the voice you hear when you call information is not the voice of Dracula. It is the voice of a person who is very busy.

No thank you, I am sorry, but I will not. I have no interest in talking to you about the city.
Art, if you want to call it that,

Can you lead the people to this year's Forest City Annual, or can they make themselves look?

JENNA LANE

It's been a month since the Forest City Annual Outdoor sculpture exhibition opened in Deering Oaks. If you've been to the park recently, maybe the bit of information peek to the left glazing through the trees might have caught your eye. It's a new display called "The Garde's," located inside the seasonal kiosks and made up of stainless steel pieces that have been collected over the years from various locations.

The Garde has always been known for its ability to attract the public with unique art installations and events. The Garde's move to outdoor displays has been met with mixed reactions from some residents, who believe that the Garde's decision to display the sculptures in Deering Oaks was too hasty. However, the Garde's new display has become a popular attraction in the park, with many visitors taking photos and sharing them on social media.

The Garde's Outdoor sculpture exhibition is open daily from 9 am to 5 pm and is free to the public. Visitors are encouraged to explore the park and enjoy the beautiful sculptures, which are a testament to the Garde's commitment to providing art experiences for the community.

In fact, the only reaction I've seen is of those who really want to engage with the sculpture. People have been walking around the kiosks, admiring the pieces, and even taking photos. The Garde's move to display the sculptures in Deering Oaks has been met with mixed reactions, but overall, it seems that the community is enjoying the new display and the chance to interact with the Garde's art installations.

The Garde's Outdoor sculpture exhibition is a great addition to Deering Oaks and is sure to delight visitors of all ages. So, the next time you're in the park, be sure to check out the Garde's new display and take a moment to appreciate the beauty and creativity of the sculptures.

Baldface Truth

Getting to the top of a New Hampshire mountain restores the soul — and the courage

Baldface Knob was blanketed with more blueberry bushes than I've ever seen. All I could do was sit and eat. And eat.

CFS Probiotics, a complement to the Balkadae Healthy Menu.

The mountain offers a variety of trails, but I'm feeling pretty tough anyway. We opted to forget the shelter and pitch our tents in the backpacks.

We're just across the Maine border in Saddleback Knob — only 0.7 miles up the trail but at least an hour and a half with the packs — where the stone ground is blanketed with more blueberry bushes than I've ever seen. I was so tired that all I could do was sit and eat. And eat. And eat.

The mountain offers a variety of trails, but I'm feeling pretty tough anyway. We opted to forget the shelter and pitch our tents in the backpacks.

As we neared Baldface Shelter — a compact, five-sided wooden structure covered with carved names — the climb got steeper.

The sun was already setting, but we saved our appetites for the summit. Along the way, we spied deer tracks and deer poop, intricately patterned roads, mountainous peaks and a rainbow assortment of mushrooms and mosses.

The stonework is really well done, but I'm feeling pretty tough anyway. We opted to forget the shelter and pitch our tents in the backpacks.

At the clifFs edge, paralyzed by fear. I was beginning to ache and the wind was turning my best friend's hair into a wind sock.

I took a deep breath and dove headfirst into the pool from the miniature cliffs that frame the AMC lot at Baldface. I've gotten myself exclaiming, "Are they trying to kill me?"
